LONDON, Saturday, March 12, 1864.

We have had a pretty strong attack of the war fever since my last. The sleepy old House of Lords, that generally meets at 5 P. M. and adjourns in 20 minutes or half an hour, on Tuesday night waked itself up and "pitched into" Earl Russell. Four Earls, Derby, Ellenborough, Grey and Shaftesbury—of whom the Music Hall chorus says:

"God bless the Earl of Shaftesbury, came down upon the panic Lord, the Foreign Secretary, in a style so belligerent, that Lord John turned sharply upon them, and said, if you don't like the way we are managing matters, all you have to do is to turn us out and try it yourselves. It is to be seen whether this challenge will be accepted.
And he must be a fool,"

It was not a party matter. Both sides were up in arms against the invasion of Jutland. Austria is sending a fleet round from the Adriatic to the Baltic. A strong fleet will make Alsen untenable. Would England fear this? Earl Russell did not commit the Government, but he hinted strongly of what a British fleet might do in certain contingencies. The Morning Post and Telegraph make the most of it. There was something like a panic in the Stock Exchange, and hasty people were talking of war.

There is nothing in it. The Times is cooing like a turtle dove. The Herald flames warlike; but that is only to embarrass the Government. It might, if more influential, embarrass its own party. No; England cannot go to war in this matter only in one way—only by agreement with France; and it does not yet appear that France wants war with Germany.

The Conservative party in England has not been so strong for years as at this moment; and to that party likely to become the ally of Vienna Examiner in a war with Austria? The Jew Appellee or any other Jew may believe it, not I. And here, two days ago, we had a string of German Serene Highnesses half a column long, assisting at the christening of our little baby prince. Albert Victor Christian Edward, christened on the anniversary of his parents' marriage, so that one set of noisy bell ringings celebrated both events.

No; stocks have recovered. Russia meant nothing. The Austrian fleet has just passed Messina steaming west, but it is only to protect German commerce. The truth is, the Danes have not behaved well, and have brought all this trouble on themselves by their headstrong folly. So the Times told us yesterday; and the Times tells us nothing now that does not come from headquarters. The German Liberals have acted hasty in forcing on the war, but Austria was obliged to put itself at the head of Germany, and will go no further than justice requires.

In any case, however, England must preserve her blessed neutrality. Isolation? What then? There may be political isolation, but not commercial. England can still manufacture and trade, and sell ships, guns, and all sorts of things to all sorts of belligerents. This is the magnificent rôle the Times has marked out for England, and which a strong English party accepts. England has given up the Ionian Islands, and is blowing up and demolishing the costly fortifications at Corfu, to the intense disgust of the Ionians. Next comes Malta. What is Malta good for? Cede Malta to France or Italy. Then blow up Gibraltar, and hand it back to Spain, less the casemates and artillery.

There is a new Holy Alliance in Europe, it is said—an alliance of Russia, Austria and Prussia, against the revolutionary doctrine of nationalities. It is asserted and denied. Great joy in St. Petersburgh when Austria declared martial law in Galicia. But the Germans are fighting in Denmark for the principle of nationalities. Italy unites upon that principle. France is committed to it. It is the doctrine of revolutionary Europe. But Russia, Austria, Prussia, England, all great Powers, composed of heterogeneous States, must fight against it. France cannot strike a blow to restore Holstein to Denmark, and will not join England in any diplomatic or other action which will bind shackles upon an unwilling people.

In a word, such is the confusion of principles and interests, that nothing can be done. If England were to declare war upon Austria, Vienna Examiner would instantly give the word march upon Venetia. But all France lies between the Rhine and neither England nor Italy dare act against the man who is master of France, and therefore of Europe. I see, therefore, but one key to the problem—the interests of France—the will of the Emperor.

The war, so far as actual fighting is concerned, makes no progress, but the Germans are waiting for ships and heavy artillery. A train of mortars and shell has just passed through Hamburg. Austria, which holds the moderate party, that hints the war movement, in order to control it, offers to evacuate Jutland if the Danes will also leave the corner of Schleswig which they still hold. But the Danes are not in a humor to listen to such a compromise. The Danes are, however, ready to give up Holstein. They have discharged every Holsteiner in their army. There is a report that Russia is preparing to act against Sweden, in case this Power should join England and France to help the Danes. Europe is a great chess-board, with the pieces so arranged that any movement is full of peril.

The debate on the condition of Ireland, last night, was of some interest. Mr. Bazaar said the population of Ireland since 1837 had diminished 2,000,000—more than the population of Denmark and the Duchies. Including natural increase, this was a loss of 4,000,000 or 7,000,000. The feeling of discontent and compensation was never so great as now. Sir Roundell Palmer gave a humorous account of the Fenians and their ancient origin, when they were great rangers, wore long hair, ate fish and slept in trees like gorillas. He thought the best thing Irishmen could do for themselves and for Ireland was to emigrate. Mr. Bazaar quoted a Protestant gentleman of the south of Ireland, who said the whole population would welcome a French army at Bantry Bay. Up jumped an Orangeman, from Ulster, who declared that all his part of Ireland would rise as one man to defend it from invasion. Mr. Bazaar's speech was denounced as democratic and revolutionary; but it was very true for all that. Emigration to America is the one safety valve that saves Ireland from an immediate outbreak at home. In England there is some pity for Ireland, but more hatred, and still more contempt. The mass of the people know little of the country and care less. Emigration is to them "a good riddance." But notwithstanding the distress, there was not one case of homicide in Ireland in the last month; and more persons starved to death in London than in all Ireland.

The House of Commons has been engaged on various domestic questions of more or less interest. The Admiralty has been hauled over the coals on the question of guns. The navy has been badly built, but by copying French and American models, it is better. It used to be manned by the sweepings of the jails and the press-gangs. It has now a pretty good supply of sailors. But it is behind both France and America in regard to guns. Favoritism to Sir Wm. Armstrong has compelled other inventors to sell their guns to Russia and Denmark, and the consequence is that the British navy has no really reliable artillery. But if Denmark takes the last advice of the Times, which has every aspect of being "inspired," "if she sees that nobody will help her, and yield all that is required, no guns may be wanted. The Times asserts that if England declared war in Europe, she would at once be attacked by America.

The question of flogging in the army and navy came up on Thursday night. There is not so much flogging as formerly. The amount is reduced to fifty lashes for one offence. It used to be a thousand. In 1862, 25,000 lashes were administered in the navy and 6,000 in the army. To be accurate, there were 5,000. It was argued that men fit to be flogged were not fit for either service; but the answer was that the Government could not be so select, and must take such as they can get. The social status of the British soldier is, for some reason, the lowest that exists in any army in the civilized world. The flogging clause passed, but by very large majority. Then came the question as to branding, or indelible marking of deserters and those bad subjects that are drummed out of even this army. The practice was introduced by the late Lord Hardinge, to put a stop to reenlistments by these bad characters. This clause was strongly opposed, but not a majority of thirty. In the course of the debate it was stated that flogging was practiced in every jail in England.

Another domestic trouble brought before Parliament is the condition of cattle and sheep in England. This wonderful country of beef and mutton is in a panic on account of the diseases of its animals. There are 8,000,000 head of cattle in the United Kingdom, and 40,000,000 sheep. In six years the losses by disease have amounted to £20,000,000. But this is not the worst. Many more diseased animals than are lost, are killed, sold and eaten. When the poorest refuse them, and they escape the police, they are made into sausages. Great quantities of diseased meat are every week seized in London; but immensely larger quantities are eaten. It was not a pleasant subject for a debate either just before or just after the dinner hour. There is to be some law of inspection and prevention. A Tory member declared it was all owing to free trade and the importation of foreign cattle; and as to inspection, he would like to see a veterinary surgeon, with his stethoscope, examining the lungs of a herd of wild bullocks just landed from a Belgian or Spanish steamer.

The truth is, that high feeding, close quarters and bad ventilation, with the alternations of heat and cold to which cattle are exposed in being brought to market, are enough to disease them; and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals would do well to inspect the holds of the cattle steamers all round the island. London ought to be supplied with beef packed in ice, which might be so brought any distance.

An act to permit the use of the French or metrical system of weights and measures, is passing through Parliament. It meets with strong opposition, but it passed a second reading by a strong vote. A great manufacturing and commercial nation should have a simple and uniform system, and if all civilized countries could unite upon the same system of measures and money, it would be a great convenience. The French system of weights and measures is so simple in itself, and has been so widely adopted, that it will probably become universal; but the American money system ought to be adopted also. England should give up its unit of the pound sterling as too large, and the French the franc as too small. The dollar, already adopted in so many countries, with its decimal divisions, is the best monetary system in the world. With weights, measures and money universal and decimal, the world's work would be much easier.

The Mexican Emperor remains at Paris. There are many things to arrange, but all goes smoothly. He will come to London next Tuesday. He thinks Napoleon the greatest mind on the planet, and Napoleon is also delighted with his protégé.

The King of Bavaria has just died of erysipelas, the first royal victim to the Danish invasion; and is succeeded by his son Ludwig II. Bavaria, for an important State that can place 100,000 men in the field, has queer luck with its monarchs. Ludwig I. made shipwreck with poor pretty Lola Montez, though the benefactor of his people as to statutes, pictures and beer. Munich had the worst beer in Europe. He made it the best. But his family has had hard fortunes, and has in it more ex-Kings and Queens than any royal family in the world, I believe.

Lord Lyndhurst's collection of the pictures of his father, Mr. Copley, has just been sold at auction. The "Death of Major Pierson" was bought at £1,500, for the British National Gallery, and the "Family Picture," containing portraits of the painter and his wife and children, was bought by Mr. Clarke, a relative of Mrs. Copley, and will return to Boston.

The popularity of the Alabama has caused its name to be adapted to a farce at Drury Lane, formerly played as the "Spitfire." Just now, no vessel in the world is so famous. We are expecting to hear of her next on the coast of California, cruising for a gold steamer, as Lord Anson cruised so many years ago in the Centurion, for the Manila galleon, loaded with silver from Acapulco.

The two great opera houses will soon open with a rivalry which emboldens all that is attractive in Europe. Patti still reigns at the Convent Garden. The great Tercentenary also approaches. A pavilion to seat 3,000 has been built at the sleepy little village of Stratford-on-Avon, and plays, concerts, balls, and various other entertainments are to be given for a week, in memory of the immortal bard. Excursion trains will be run from every corner of the Kingdom, and arrangements have been made to supply the visitors with those inevitable British luxuries, beer, bens, pork pies and sandwiches; but where the thousands are to sleep has not, apparently, been thought of. The little hamlet of Stratford cannot give one-tenth of them lodgings.

The Alexandra case is before the Lords on an appeal, for an appeal for a new trial, but has not reached a decision. As to the case of the rams, it will probably be reached in two years. The Government has just taken out a commission to examine the Pasha of Egypt, to ascertain if he knows anything about them. In case he does not, another commission will be applied for to examine the Emperor of China—then the Tycoon of Japan, and so on. But the legal proceedings are no slower in this case than in others involving property. English law is never rapid, unless a man is to be hanged. Law is sometimes fast, often slow, and never sure.

OUR PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

The Dano-German War—Maximilian—Confederate Intrigues—Lectures—Compliment to an American Inventor.

PARIS, Tuesday, March 8, 1864.

The Constitutionnel of this morning, a paper which speaks more correctly for the Government than any of the semi-official papers, declares that the new Holy Alliance is a phantom, and the loud cries of the English journals so many false alarms. The conditions of such an alliance, according to this journal, no longer exist. The Governments which are supposed to have entered into it are more constitutional and less despotic in form than they were in 1815, and cannot go backwards. According to the Constitutionnel, they cannot even have entered into an arrangement of any kind, since Russia holds dynastic claims on the territory in dispute between Denmark and the German States, and since she has a strong interest in preventing so powerful a military people as the Germans from becoming also a powerful maritime people, as they would do if they were permitted to destroy Denmark as a nation. So that, notwithstanding the general belief in a war, the Government papers at Paris at least discredit such an event, and try to tranquillize the public mind.

The new Emperor of Mexico has been "within our walls" since Sunday, and is housed with Napoleon, concocting schemes for the building up of that famous Latin barrier in America. The Archduke was detained at Brussels a week longer than was intended, by some kind of a political hitch which threw our Bourse into a fever and the politicians into a quandary; for if the Prince could not come to Paris it was because he was not going to Mexico, and if he was not going to Mexico it was because there was going to be a war between France and Austria in Italy and on the Rhine! The reasoning was good, and there was an excuse for the fever of the speculators and the quandary of the politicians. But the King of Belgium hurried off to London, and there the embargo on the Prince's visit to Paris was taken off, how or why we do not yet know, and now, as I said before, the two Imperial conspirators are sitting in council at the Tuileries arranging the affairs of the American continent.

As to the private affairs between the two Emperors, we learn from the Austrian organ at Paris, the Memorial Diplomatique, that the Emperor Maximilian agrees to pay to Napoleon from the treasury of Mexico, for the expenses of the war, 230,000,000 of francs—not a large sum for the throne of an empire, when it is the empire that pays it; that Napoleon is to leave his present army in Mexico a few months longer and until such time as it may be deemed possible to withdraw it; that in the meantime a Mexican army is to be organized, composed of two elements, to wit: a small force, mostly cavalry, drawn from the Mexican population known to be friendly to the new Government, and of a large force, to be called the Foreign Legion, probably six thousand strong, drawn almost exclusively from the French army, and composed of adventurous spirits, who will be well paid and promised rapid promotion in return for their incorruptible devotion to the new dynasty.

The young Prince Camino Bonaparte, cousin of the Emperor, has already entered the French Foreign Legion, now in Mexico, and it is intended, no doubt, to pass him into the permanent force, destined to remain in the country, with promotion to a higher rank, so as to give prestige and moral force to the new Government.

The Prince Maximilian, we learn from another source, desired to have command of Gen. Bazaine and the French army of occupation as long as they remained in the country, but this, it is said, has been refused him.

The Confederate agents abroad are said to look upon the Prince Maximilian as an agent who is to come somehow or other to their aid, and his arrival at Paris has thrown them into quite a fever of agreeable excitement. Senator Gwin, who sometime ago had an interview with the Emperor on the subject mainly of Mexico, has also had an interview with Maximilian, and this circumstance has given rise to the report that the California Senator was going to Mexico as Minister of the Confederacy. This report proves, however, not to be true; he is going to Mexico, but not in any official capacity; he declares that he has done with political life, and that he is going to settle down in the northern part of the new empire to turn his attention to mining, agriculture and money making. As for the Confederate diplomatic agent to the Court of Maximilian, it is said here that Gen. Preston, of Kentucky, late United States Minister to Spain, has already been named, with Mr. Fiennes, former Secretary of Legation to Mexico under Mr. Forsyth, as Secretary of Legation.

The Democratic Nominating Committee of Paris have failed to agree on the candidates to be run for the two vacancies at Paris for the Corps Législatif; the split taking place on the question of running war or peace candidates. Messrs. Guéroult, editor of the Opinion Nationale and Deputy, and M. Havin, editor of the Siècle and Deputy, refuse to support any candidate in their papers who is not in favor of war for Poland, war for Venetia and Hungary, and for the evacuation of Rome; while Mr. de Girardin, editor of the Presse, M. Thiers, M. Ollivier, Deputies, and other members of the committee, declare that they will only support candidates who pledge themselves to a peace policy on these questions. Thus far, Messrs. Carnot and Laboulaye stand the best chance of nomination, and it is expected that at the last moment the Liberals will unite upon whatever men the majority of the Opposition journals place at the head of their columns. The Government has not yet shown any sign of putting forward candidates, but the Emperor is known to be favorable to running official candidates even where their defeat is certain.

An important discovery has been made in France. It has been found that public lectures on the American system are a good thing, and not dangerous either to public morals, nor public order, nor, more important than all, to the stability of the Government! What a wonderful discovery for the nation that calls itself the most civilized and most enlightened nation in the world! Two Winters ago, the then Minister of the Interior, M. de Persigny, was coaxed and cajoled into giving permission for a series of these public lectures on literary and scientific subjects in the small room of the Rue de la Paix; but the authorization was given with fear and trembling, and surrounded with all sorts of restrictions and precautions. The Prefect of Police said that he could not guarantee that it was not a political club in disguise, but he took good care to marshal enough force at each lecture to prevent any demonstration of treasonable designs either in word or in action. Everybody but the Government was pleased with this first attempt, but for some reason or other, M. de Persigny refused the next Winter to renew the authorization. The present Minister of the Interior, M. Duruy, takes a different view of the affair, and he has not only authorized the lectures of the Rue de la Paix, but he has authorized others at the Salle Barthélemy, of the Sorbonne, (public evening lectures having no connection with the official day lectures,) and elsewhere. The lectures of the Sorbonne opened yesterday evening, and more than four thousand persons, composed of the aristocracy of letters and of wealth, presented themselves for admission, but the room would not hold half of them. Even the Minister of the Interior himself, who arrived late with Madame Duruy, was obliged to perform a feat common to popular church orators in America—scale a window. The astonishment of the Parisians at this general thirst after knowledge, or perhaps at the fact that public lectures do not breed a revolution, knows no bounds, and for the moment they have found a new emotion of the first class.

The expression of Gen. Banks, in a late circular, that "indifference shall be treated as a crime," is seized upon as a good occasion for proclaiming that another Butler is at work at New-Orleans and another reign of terror is in operation there. They pounce upon this unfortunate circular with such avidity as to give the impression that they had been long waiting for an occasion to assimilate the present to the late Governor of the Gulf Department, and, however appropriate may be the acts of Gen. Banks in his government of the unruly people of New-Orleans, it is to be regretted that he, as well as the rest of our Generals, do not adopt the European system of writing little and executing a good deal. To govern without writing seems to be a difficult task to learn.

The indulgence you show to open enemies in your midst is a standing subject of wonder abroad. A leading Northern politician, who has done more to cripple the President in his efforts to put down the rebellion than any other one man North of South, goes to Washington and is invited to the White House, and when his wife gives a soirée she table to display ostentatiously on her table a bouquet marked with the name of the wife of the President! A lot of wealthy Secessionists have collected in New-York, and there under your noses, and through the medium of two or three complaisant journals, are spreading treason abroad through the State, preventing enlistments and stirring up disaffection and revolt. And yet you toil on against these adverse influences, and affect to believe them harmless. The country is full of foreign writers, paid exclusively to write you down on all subjects and under all circumstances, no matter what may be their own convictions or how you may treat them personally, and yet you even court these gentlemen, and, by your very kindnesses, furnish them opportunities to plunge the dagger deeper into your heart. Lately a distinguished Senator introduced the able correspondent of the vilest of the Secessionist papers of London to the President and his lady at the White House, and all Europe at this moment is laughing over the humiliating caricature which this writer drew of the President and his lady, and of the manner in which they received him.

The amount of matter which is now published in Europe against the cause of the Union is beyond belief. There never was a cause so systematically written down—never a cause around which were encircled so many political and mercenary motives of abuse as this one; for its success destroys the anxious political hopes of the governing classes of Europe, and ruins the pockets of the Secessionists themselves, and of a larger number of sympathizing speculators than has ever before been interested in any foreign war. Nine tenths of everything you land wish the rebellion success and believe in its success, while in France a vast majority see no hope for a reestablishment of the Union; so that when the rebellion is finally put down, as it must be, there will be a larger astonishment among mankind, a greater shaking among aristocratic fossils of Europe, a more convulsive grasping at empty pockets, than it has yet been given to man to see.

As the Spring campaign commences, the organs of the Secessionists abroad have recommenced their unfair way of giving the news from the war—that is to say, omitting entirely the Union victories, and dwelling at length on rebel victories. Thus we learn that the agents of the Confederacy abroad are still active and hopeful.

The Emperor has just conferred the Cross of the Legion of Honor on Mr. Claxton, of Baltimore, for his improvements on and experiments with an American invention—Bagnewell's breech-loading cannon. Mr. Claxton has been experimenting for more than a year with this gun at the Government works at Auguoême, the French Government paying him six hundred francs a month to exercise his own gun—a fact which demonstrates the high value they place upon it.

MALAKOFF.

OUR BERLIN CORRESPONDENCE.

The Schleswig-Holstein Question as Viewed in Prussia—Enthusiasm of the People—Celebration of Washington's Birthday in Germany.

BERLIN, Saturday, Feb. 27, 1864.

The great question of the day is that of Schleswig-Holstein. The war of 1848, and the attempted settlement of the affair by the London Treaty of 1852, which still left the two Duchies in the hands of the Danes, under certain conditions, were equally unsatisfactory. The recent accession of a new King, and the subsequent Federal occupation of Holstein, owing to the non-compliance of Denmark with these conditions, has stirred the matter up again. "Germany for the Germans" is the universal cry, and Austria and Prussia have been obliged, in order to retain their prestige, to take the lead in the movement. The Federal Diet, proceeding with its usual slowness, has failed to meet the demands either of the people or of these great Powers, who wished Schleswig occupied also, unless the Danes would suspend the November Constitution in regard to the latter Duchy. These proposals not being acceded to by either the Diet or Denmark, the Austrians and Prussians crossed the Eider—the rubicon of Germany at this time—and laid siege to the Dannewerke, which consists of a series of earthworks in the most southerly part of Schleswig, and forms a defence somewhat of the nature of the Great Wall in China, or the rampart constructed by the Romans in Britain. This was supposed impregnable, but, to the surprise of everybody, the Danes, after a brief resistance, evacuated the works during the night, and were already far advanced on their line of retreat before the opposing forces either knew or would credit it. They made a hasty pursuit, but after a sharp encounter with the rear guard of the Danes, who led them into an ambuscade, the latter continued their march without further molestation till they reached the fortifications of Düppel, opposite the Island of Alsen, both of which positions they still hold. The first impression on hearing of this evacuation, was that there was "something rotten in the State of Denmark," and the Commander of the troops, Gen. La Mesa, was recalled. This was merely to satisfy popular clamor, however, as the Danish King, in an address to the army, justifies the measure on the score of necessity. The army, which was his sole reliance, was outnumbered, and in danger of being outflanked, and it was judged most prudent to retire to the stronger position of Düppel, which the Danes held successfully in the war of 1848. This place, however, the allied forces are preparing to attack as soon as the state of the roads will allow them to bring up their heavy siege guns. It is said an armistice has been proposed by England, but that the Austrians and Prussians will not consent to it, so long as a Dane remains on the soil of Schleswig.

There is, of course, great rejoicing here and elsewhere, over the valor and success of the German troops. The Austrian and Prussian officers and soldiers certainly displayed much bravery, there being considerable losses in both corps, especially the former. The other day thirteen cannon arrived here, which had been taken from the Danes. They were adorned with wreaths, evergreens and ribbons red, white and blue, the national colors of the Duchies, and were drawn through the Brandenburg Gate, thence up the magnificent street Unter den Linden, as far as the Royal Palace, accompanied by many officers, followed by five artillerists, with white bands on their left arms, the rear of the procession being brought up with thirteen Austrians in a wagon. The King received the Guard of Honor in the Palace, and made them a short address. The people greeted them with loud hurrahs. Five of the cannon were taken to Vienna, the remaining eight being exhibited in front of the Museum for several days, where they were nearly devoured by the populace, and afterward deposited in the Arsenal.

In fact, Berlin has been in a delightful state of excitement all Winter on this subject. It was one of the principal causes of disagreement between the House of Deputies and the Government, and undoubtedly led to the sudden dissolution of the Prussian Parliament not long since. "Schleswig-Holstein, Meerumschlungen," is the favorite air—it is called for and encored at all the concerts, the audience accompanying the music with the words—the organ-grinders play it under your windows, and the boys whistle it in the streets. Portraits of "Friedrich VIII., Duke of Schleswig-Holstein," and maps of the Duchies of every size and price, hang in the windows of all the book and print stores. Two new plays, one entitled, "Die Preussen in Schleswig," and the other, "Berliner Kinder in Schleswig," have already appeared, and are mightily performed to crowded houses.

It would only be a waste of time to discuss the merits of the Schleswig-Holstein question, but the diplomatists in Europe are at their wit's end on the subject, and the situation is daily becoming more interesting. The Danes have laid an embargo on all shipping belonging to the German Confederacy, propose to blockade all German ports, and their men-of-war are cruising in the English channel and elsewhere for prizes. The Austrians, in return, have dispatched a squadron of twelve sail to the scene of action, and the Prussian navy is also being rapidly concentrated on the spot. So look out for a naval fight before long. The steamers moving between New-York, Bremen, and Hamburg, will sail, it is said, under the Russian flag. In the mean time, the Prussians are busily engaged in fortifying Kiel, and several other seaports in Holstein, as if they intended to remain in possession, and have set a large number of men at work demolishing the Dannewerke. They have also occupied Kolding, a frontier town in Jutland, which invasion of the latter province has caused quite a stir in diplomatic circles, although the move is declared to be merely for "strategic reasons," which certainly is a reasonable explanation. The latest news received is, that a conference, on a new basis, respecting the Dano-German dispute, has been proposed by England, and assented to by Austria and Prussia. It is also stated that France accedes to it provided Russia also falls in. Denmark has it under consideration, and the Federal Diet will soon report upon it. An indective infantry encounter has just taken place between the Danes and Prussians in front of the fortifications of Düppel.

Frederick VIII. has been extensively proclaimed Duke of Schleswig-Holstein throughout these Duchies without opposition on the part of the Austro-Prussians, although from being supported by the National Democratic party, it is not certain whether his claims will be recognized, in full at least, by either these Great Powers or the Diet.

I have become rather tired of being asked when the war in America will end, so that now, whenever that question is put to me, I always reply by inquiring when the Schleswig-Holstein affair is to be settled.

I notice that you have had some excitement in New-York owing to the microscopic discovery of poisonous insects in ham. The ham may have been of the Connecticut basswood variety, which would very likely be thus affected. But there has been considerable alarm and discussion here about these insects, which are called trichinæ; microscopic photographs have been taken of them; and Virchow, the distinguished Professor of Pathological Anatomy in the University, has published a card in the papers stating that he has found these insects only in the lean of raw bacon, and that it is safe to eat it in a cooked state. This has rather quieted the public mind, and it was only the other afternoon that I witnessed, at a concert, a large consumption of sausages, while the band was playing "Trichinenfreie Polka von Kreisleimer." As for myself, I am not fond of pork in any shape or state just now.

The anniversary of Washington's Birthday was celebrated, on the evening of the 22d, by a grand dinner-party given by the American Minister, Hon. N. B. Judd, to the Americans in Berlin, to which many eminent foreigners were also invited. Toasts were given and speeches made by various gentlemen who were present, including several Germans, among others the celebrated historian, Von Ranke, and the whole affair passed off in the most agreeable manner. It is fortunate that our country is so well represented here, and I find that the "Amerikaners," as we are called, are better liked than any other nation by the German people, who also side with the North, with the exception of some of the nobility, who entertain the same regard for Slavery in America as they do for serfdom in Europe.

THE MERSEY RAMS.

IMPORTANT CORRESPONDENCE.

From the Manchester Examiner, March 12.

Correspondence respecting the iron-clads building at Birkenhead, has been presented to Parliament by command of Her Majesty, and appeared yesterday as a Parliamentary paper. The correspondence is exclusively between Earl Russell, Mr. Adams, Lord Lyons, and Mr. Seward, and a considerable portion of it has already been published. The following will be of interest with reference to the allegation that Her Majesty's Government were led to order the detention of the rams in consequence of Mr. Adams' note of September 5:

(Extract.)

Mr. Layard to Mr. Stewart.

Foreign Office, Sept. 5, 1863.

We have given orders to-day to the Commissioners of Customs at Liverpool to prevent the two iron-clads leaving the Mersey. These orders had scarcely been sent when we received the note from Mr. Adams, of which I send you a copy. (The note of September 5.) Mr. Adams is not yet aware that orders have been given to stop the vessels. You may inform Mr. Seward confidentially of the fact.

Subsequent to the date of the correspondence already published, are communications between the two Governments in respect to the report of Mr. Mallory, the Confederate Naval Secretary. Lord Lyons, on Dec. 24, 1863, transmits to Earl Russell extracts from the Washington Star of Dec. 10, purporting to give the substance of the report, and on Dec. 31 transmits a copy of the New-York Times, of Dec. 30, containing a full copy of the report. On Jan. 19 of this year, Mr. Adams submits a copy in the same terms as that furnished by Lord Lyons, and makes it the occasion of representations. He holds that that report puts it beyond a doubt that the rams were intended for the Confederates; that further toleration of the practices described in that report would be to give permission to the enemies of the United States to make war against them from the British shores; that the toleration of these avowed enemies of the United States so engaged exceeds the permissible toleration of political exiles; that it is his Government's conviction the Confederate States have been informed by their agents of plunging the two countries into a war to serve their own purposes; that his Government endeavors to defeat their designs without giving offence or friction to Her Majest's Government or the British people; that he thinks the premature recognition of Confederate belligerent rights has caused these designs; that his Government could do no more than it has done; and that to prevent danger "it would seem that a resort to some measures of greater stringency than have yet been taken is necessary on the part of Her Majesty's Government." To this note Earl Russell replies:

Foreign Office, Feb. 5, 1864.

Sir: Her Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the representations contained in your letter of the 19th ultimo, with regard to the alleged use of British territory for belligerent purposes by the Government of the so-called Confederate States, as shown in the report of the Confederate Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Mallory, of which you inclose a copy; and I have to state to you that this document appears to Her Majesty's Government to contain the strongest proof, if proof were wanted, that they have endeavored to prevent, to the extent of their power, the abuse of British territory by either belligerent, and, with very slight exceptions, with no small difficulty, the efficiency of the measures which they have undertaken, and that the complaint which their doing so had been advantageous in no slight degree to the more powerful of the two belligerents, namely, the United States. What is termed in Mr. Mallory's report "the unfriendly construction of Her Majesty's laws" is therein made matter of grave complaint against England by the Government of the so-styled Confederate States, while to the same cause is ascribed the fact that these States have been prevented from obtaining the services of the greater part of a formidable war fleet which they had dotted to create. Her Majesty's Government are fully sensible of the nature and importance of the admissions made by Mr. Mallory's report of the endeavors of the Government of the so-called Confederate States by their agents in this country and in Canada to violate in various ways Her Majesty's neutrality. Her Majesty's Government have already taken steps to make this Government aware that such proceedings cannot be tolerated, and Her Majesty's Government will not fail to give to those representations to which you have invited their attention, the consideration which they undoubtedly deserve. There is, however, one passage in your letter which it is impossible for Her Majesty's Government to pass over without special notice. This passage is as follows: "I am further directed respectfully to represent that the toleration of these avowed enemies of the United States, which known to be carrying on these hostile practices now fully revealed, within the British ports and jurisdiction, without restraint of any kind, cannot be regarded as an exercise of the unquestionable right of sheltering political exiles, but rather as connivance or permitting them to abuse that right for the purpose of more effectually availing themselves of British aid and cooperation, now notoriously given them in waging war with a country with which Great Britain is at peace. In reply to this allegation, Her Majesty's Government think it right to state that Her Majesty's dominions cannot necessarily continue to be open to the subjects of both belligerents so long as they are at peace with both of them; but that Her Majesty's Government will at the same time, continue to put in force, as they have hitherto done, to the full extent of the means in their power, the laws of the country against those subjects of either of the belligerents who may be found, by investigation, to have, by their abuse of the rights of hospitality and to have offended against the authority of the crown. With regard to its being made a matter of complaint by the Government of the United States that Her Majesty's Government thought fit, upon the original commencement of hostilities, to recognize the claims of belligerents in both the parties to this unhappy contest, Her Majesty's Government can only repeat the observation which they have had occasion to make on former occasions in reply to similar representations received from you, that any other course would have justly exposed this country to a charge of violating the clearest principle and most ancient precedent of International law.

I am, &c. (Signed) Russell.

THE PASHA OF EGYPT TO BE EXAMINED.

In the Judges' Chambers, on Tuesday, March 8, the case of the Attorney-General vs. Laird and others came before Mr. Justice Mellor, upon an application for a commission for the examination of witnesses; Mr. R. E. Turner for the Attorney-General stated that these were informations against the defendants for equipping and fitting out two iron-plated steam rams for the Confederate Government, and he applied for a commission to Cairo and other places, to examine His Highness the Pasha of Egypt and others, whose evidence was material for the crown. Mr. Warren Williams, for the defendants, stated that they courted the fullest investigation, as they had a complete answer to the case, but contended that this was a vexatious application adopted to delay the proceedings, and nothing else. The vessels were seized early in November, and no information was filed till February. The vessels had been detained all this time, to the great loss of the defendants, and now the commission had been obviously sought to the delay, to their great loss and prejudice. Mr. Justice Mellor said it was sworn that the evidence was essential, and he could hardly refuse the application. W. W. Williams said, if so, the Attorney-General ought to give the names of the witnesses, as giving that of the Pasha of Egypt was merely illusory; they would scarcely examine him personally, but some ministers or other persons. The facts also intended to be proved ought to be stated, and the commission returned in time to try the case at the sittings after the Easter term. Mr. Turner said they intended to bring on the case for trial at that time. Mr. Justice Mellor said he should make the order, but the names of the witnesses so far as practicable, should be bona fide given to the defendants, and also a statement of the matters of fact intended to be proved; the commission also to be returned into court by the 10th of May next.

THE ALABAMA.

The Cochin China Chronicle, of Jan. 23, gives the following account of the capture of the American ship, Emma Jane, by the Alabama: "The Emma Jane was a vessel of about 1,100 tons, belonging to one of the ports on the Northern side of the now disunited States. She left Bombay on the 2d inst. bound to Moulmein with ballast, and on the 14th, when off Trivandrum, sighted a steamer which afterwards proved the terrible Alabama, Capt. Semmes. She approached the Emma Jane with American flag flying, and when a short distance from her, fired a gun to make her heave to, and sent an armed boat on board. The Emma Jane at this period also showed throughout American colors, but the moment the armed boat reached alongside, the American flag was struck, and the Confederate banner hoisted on board the steamer. The officer in charge of the boat demanded Capt. Jennan's presence on board the Alabama, with the ship's papers, and on his reaching the steamer the papers were examined by Capt. Semmes, who declared the Emma Jane a prize, and Capt. Jennan and his crew prisoners of war, and decided that the vessel must be burnt. Capt. Jennan was permitted to return back to his ship, and twenty minutes allowed to pack up such effects as he was permitted to retain. Mrs. Jennan, the Commander's wife, was allowed to bring away all her wearing apparel, the Commander a trunk, and each officer and man a bag, containing clothing only. Several boats were then sent on board, all the provisions and stores, and other valuables removed to the Alabama, and the Emma Jane was set on fire. The Alabama being under steam, and the weather a perfect calm, she was detained in the vicinity of the burning vessel for two days, and then made her way to Anjengo, where she landed the Commander and nineteen of the crew of the destroyed vessel, with nine days' provisions to find their way to Cocoin. The Alabama is represented as a vessel carrying six side guns, and two heavy centre ones, and appears to be well furnished with stores of all descriptions, taken, no doubt, from the various captures—but does not appear to be flushed in cash—as she is said to have had scarcely the means to buy fresh provisions while at Anjengo. Even an essential an article as fresh beef, was taken on board the vessel, but for cash, was not purchased, as being too expensive. The accumulation of chronometers on board is declared to be something marvelous, there being no less than 200. Capt. Semmes is represented as a generous and amiable man, with great humanity and austerity of manners, and yet at times capable of much courtesy and affability. He frequently goes ashore himself to maintain the character of vessels in sight. He wears the uniform of the United States Navy, and is perpetually armed with a terrible revolver belted to his side. The crew (about 120 in number) consists of men of all nations, and we are told that the English and Irish element preponderates. Mrs. Jennan, we understand, had frequent conversations with Capt. Semmes, and did not mean him any disrespect, with those severe and cutting reflections which a lady alone can bestow without fear of retaliation, under such circumstances; but they appear not to have brought conviction to the mind of the Confederate hero. There seems to be little doubt, however, of his great anxiety for the termination of this unhappy intermeciine war."

THE ALEXANDRA CASE.

The case of The Queen vs. Sillem and others came before the House of Lords on appeal on March 11. There were present the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wensleydale, Lord Kingsdown, Lord Chelmsford, Lord St. Leonards and Lord Cranworth. The Attorney-General opened the case on the part of the Crown. He said it was an appeal from a judgment in the Court of Exchequer Chamber. An appeal from a decision in the Court of Exchequer was made to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, but their Lordships dismissed the appeal on the ground of incompetence. The Alexandra was seized in April, 1862, under the Foreign Enlistment Act. The case came before a special jury in the Court of Exchequer in 1863, when a verdict was found for the defendants. The Crown then proposed to tender a bill of exceptions, and it was arranged that there should be no difficulty in settling the terms, however, when Michaelmas term arrived, no bill of exceptions had been settled, and it was thought better that a new trial should be moved for, in order that the whole matter might be brought before the Court of Appeal. The Court had been to decide whether the rules of the Court of Exchequer, on which the appeal was dismissed by the Court of Appeal, as being mere rules, were properly made. If so, the refusal of the Exchequer Chamber to hear the appeal on the part of the Crown was clearly wrong. The learned Attorney-General proceeded to read and commentate these rules, and to show how the Common Law Procedure Act bore upon the question. He corroborated the objections urged by Sir Hugh Cairns on the part of the defendants in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and said that the process and m

Raid upon the Chattanooga Railroad—Officers Robbed and Negroes Butchered—Attempted Bribery—The Ladies of the South to the Rebel Army—Movements in the Army of the Ohio—The Enemy in Strong Force at Tunnel Hill—Miscellaneous.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Saturday, March 19.

The weather for the past four or five days has been decidedly cold and disagreeable. Business, however, and travel, all the time increase. Immediately in our midst, outside of the military, nothing is transpiring of moment. For the past few days there has been a considerable buzz around headquarters, and yesterday Lieut.-Gen. GRANT, Maj.-Gens. ROSECRANS, DODGE, SHERMAN, and SCHOFIELD, and Brig.-Gens. GARRARD (Bos), GILLEM, BARRY, WEBSTER, RAWLINS and MARSH—quite a group of luminaries—were assembled at one time. Gen. SHERMAN went to work immediately upon his arrival here, and will mount about seven thousand cavalry, which are camped in this vicinity, as soon as possible. At last the small-pox is decreasing. This dreadful disease has carried off a large number of soldiers, negroes, and citizens, during the past four months. The number at present sick is about thirteen hundred, half of whom are contrabands. A large field hospital for those afflicted with this malady has just been put in operation.

The first raid which has been made upon any of the roads in this department, since the whipping which Gen. CROXTON gave WHEELER in October last, took place on the Chattanooga Railroad, between Tullahoma and Estelle Springs, on Wednesday evening last, in that military section under the command of Gen. STANLEY. I have seen three officers who have arrived in this city since the affair, who have acquainted me with the whole details. The first we heard about the affair, prompt have it that MORGAN had made a raid upon the road, destroyed the bridge at Duck River, three trains of cars, and knocked everything into a general smash. But it was not quite so bad as that. The facts are these:

Two trains left Nashville on Wednesday morning, the mail train ahead and a freight and soldier train following. The mail and passenger train, when about ten miles south of Tullahoma, ran off the track, on account of a rail which had been misplaced. Simultaneously a gang of robbers jumped from behind trees and ledges, and commenced robbing those on board, and plundering and burning the train. A Captain of the One Hundred and Twenty-third New-York, whose name I do not remember, was deprived of an elegant establishment in the way of a costly watch and chain and diamond ring, and a number of hundreds of dollars, boots, hat, and coat. He begged of the fellow who attended to his case to spare his boots, but the robber turned a deaf ear to all such requests.

Capt. GREEN, of the Tenth Illinois, was served in the same manner, being relieved of clothing, money, and watch and chain. The Captain had between six and seven hundred dollars with him, which was eagerly seized and appropriated by his captor.

Lieut. HENRY WILLIAMS, of the First Michigan Mechanics and Engineers, was robbed of a watch and chain worth $250 and $300. He also lost a trunk full of clothes and valuable papers, and about $600 worth of mechanical implements and valuable tools. He saved his boots, from the fact that while he was pulling them off the crowd took to their heels, on account of the approach of another train, the top of which was covered with armed soldiers. The train was composed of four cars, three of which were totally destroyed, with their contents, by fire. The locomotive was not much injured.

While this work of robbery and destruction was going on, a more revolting scene was taking place in close proximity to it. There were four or five colored boys working as breakmen on the train and the officers' servants. These were all stood in a row and shot to death by a squad of ruffians under Capt. SCOTT, of Maury County. The poor fellows begged piteously for their lives, but their prayers were unheeded. One of the servants had worked a number of years in one of our barber-shops here, and had hired himself out for the benefit of his owner, as he was one of those few who are more attached to their masters than to strangers. This was his first trip, although Gen. SHERMAN tried to get him some time ago. Lieut. WILLIAMS, who had hired him, says he was literally shot to pieces—probably thirty balls entering his body. The squad that fired upon the poor negroes was at least forty strong—many of whom fired out all the charges in their revolvers. The whole party numbered about eighty men, under a Lieut.-Col. HUGHES, and belonged to ROSER's command. They were armed with revolvers, and, for the most part, clad in Federal clothing. The soldiers on the second train fired at the retreating gang, and succeeded in killing one and wounding two of them.

There are really but few guerrillas in Tennessee at present, but those who do pursue such a calling go armed with revolvers and dress in citizens' clothes or Federal uniforms. Lincoln County, where this barbarous affair occurred, is the most dreaded neighborhood through which the road runs. This is the same county where last January three members of the Third Ohio Battery were captured, tied to trees, shot and thrown into the river. You may recollect that for this act Gen. THOMAS taxed the inhabitants around about the sum of thirty thousand dollars, which was equally divided among the families of the murdered men. No doubt he will attend to this case in like manner. Since the trains have been running daily and regularly as usual.

Col. J. L. DONALDSON, Chief and Supervising Quartermaster of this department, came across a trick a few days ago, wherein some of his employes were engaged in urging forward sutler's supplies and receiving a consideration therefor. The consideration amounted to two hundred dollars cash, which was seized by DONALDSON and turned over to the Refugee Fund.

The prominent ladies of the Southern Confederacy have written a letter to the rebel soldiers at large, chock full of buncombe, the tenor of which is in regard to the system of reenlisting, which has been "adopted" by the "patriot Southern boys." They denounce in fearful language those who have deserted the standard, and pile on the agony upon those who have made up their minds to go ragged and starved during the war. They praise the President of the rebel Government warmly, evidently forgetting that this same man, but a short time ago, in a speech at Richmond, had branded the soldiers of a particular section as cowards.

Since my last there has been quite a considerable amount of skirmishing in East Tennessee. On the 16th inst., about 4 o'clock in the evening, a strong force of rebel cavalry attacked a brigade of ours, composed of the Ninth Pennsylvania, Seventh Ohio, and the Eighth and Ninth Michigan Cavalry Regiments, under the command of Col. GARRARD, and drove them into Morristown with the loss of seven men. The next day, becoming more bold, the same force came within a quarter of a mile of the town, when a superior force of our men sallied out, and after a sharp fight, succeeded in routing the rebels, who left behind ten in killed and wounded, and ten prisoners. It is believed that portions of LONGSTREET's forces have moved this way again; at least, the division at Bull's Gap has been reinforced with two brigades. There seems to be an impression rife that BRAGGING does not mean to attempt the invasion of Kentucky. For my own part I am looking for something stirring in that section of the country. LONGSTREET himself is certainly in Richmond at present. None of his army are there, though.

At Chattanooga nothing is stirring—at least on our side. It is believed that the rebel army is nearly all at Tunnel Hill and Dalton, and that it is being heavily reinforced. All of the troops sent South during GRANT's raid have returned, except the divisions of FRANK, CRUFTON and WAGNER, which are still at Mobile.

The National Cemetery is slowly approaching completion. A great general rush place at Chattanooga on Tuesday last. Col. MOSES, of the Twenty-fourth Illinois, who was wounded in the fight during the attack on Tunnel Hill, on the 25th ult., died on Monday, and expressed, as a last desire, that he should be buried in the Cemetery of Chattanooga. A large escorted him to the grave.

As I write, three regiments of returned veterans are passing, en route for Chattanooga. The first one is the Seventy-fourth Illinois, coming back with nearly six hundred new recruits.

FROM LOOKOUT VALLEY.

Affairs in the Valley—Shell Mound—The Eleventh Corps—Advent of Spring.

LOOKOUT VALLEY, Saturday, March 12, 1864.

Since my return from the North, nothing of extreme interest has occurred in this unusually quiet Valley. Guarding the railroad from Bridgeport, Ala., to Chattanooga is a duty not very arduous, but at times lively enough, when rumor says some bright morning that "JOHN MOSEBY is within six miles of Bridgeport," and "WHEELER's cavalry is advancing on Shell Mound." Then it is the Germans of the Third Division arouse from their lethargy, load and cap their pieces anew, and stand ready to meet the wily foe.

Shell Mound is within eight miles of Bridgeport, near a gap in the mountain, which renders it a vulnerable point; here, being one of the stations on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, several regiments of the Third Division of our corps are stationed. Shell Mound is so called on account of the innumerable shells found there on a large mound or knoll. These shells are of a peculiar quality, and the soldiers use their leisure in making rings from them.

The Eleventh Corps is daily increasing in size. Regiments, which have reenlisted, are returning continually, and with the new division (Gen. WEAR's) which has lately been attached to it, we will soon have a powerful corps. Gen. HOWARD is liked and much respected by all. He is not only an officer of military ability, but he is also a Christian gentleman, and his many acts of kindness will not be forgotten by many who have seen and felt them. Gen. STEINWEHR, who commands a division, has just returned from a visit home, with his health recuperated, a gain ready for a Spring campaign. Col. A. BUSSEY, who commanded the division during the absence of Gen. STEINWEHR, has resumed his post of Brigade Commander. For two years he has held this last, and many a rebel regiment fears the day when they came in contact with BUSSEY's brigade. Were stars as plenty now in the military heavens as in times past, doubtless one would fall on his shoulders.

Spring has already brought us delightful weather; the meadows in the valley present a verdant appearance, and soon we expect to change the diet of our horses from hoop-poles and cracker boxes to green pasture—on which we fancy they may thrive the better.

A ride into the country toward Knoxville reveals the poverty of the people and the hard-featured life they have been wont to live. Indeed, Middle and West Tennesseans have always spoken and thought of this part of the State as the Jews did of Nazareth. No wonder East Tennessee wants to be a State by itself, when its proud neighbors can snub it no longer. But though many of the women are rather unrefined in their way of enjoying their snuff, and most of the men wear only slouched hats and butternut coats, we will never forget that these women have been true while their more polished sisters have been false, or furious; and that those slouched hats and butternut coats have often proved the vestments of martyrdom. It is not the first time in the world's history that poverty and patriotism have gone hand in hand, nor the last time that men like ANDREW JOHNSON will come out of Nazareth.

Yesterday we had a brigade review, and next week Gen. HOOKER will review the division. We are not anxious to remain here during the Summer, as the air will be none of the pleasantest, owing to the great number of dead animals lying about—none within our corps limits however. HAWKSTAFF.

IMPORTANT FROM VICKSBURGH.

Fight at Liverpool Heights—Attack by the Rebels on Yazoo City—Defeat of the Traitors—Gallantry of the Union Troops.

Correspondence of the Missouri Republican.

VICKSBURGH, Miss., Sunday, March 13, 1864.

One of the most successful expeditions ever recorded of our operations in this vicinity, was that sent out on the 1st of last month, commanded by Col. JAMES H. COATES, of the Eleventh Illinois infantry. The force consisted of the Eleventh Illinois infantry, Eighth Louisiana infantry, and First Mississippi cavalry—the two latter being colored troops.

Lieut. H. H. DEAN, Adjutant of the Eleventh Illinois, kindly furnished me with the following particulars of the campaign: On the 31st ult., the expedition left Haines' Bluff, and ascended Yazoo River on transports, convoyed by three gun-boats, and on the 4th arrived at Liverpool Heights, within eighteen miles of Yazoo City. At this point they found the enemy posted in a strong position on a high bluff, and he immediately opened fire on the gun-boats, which were in advance, striking them several times, and putting two shots through one of them.

The Eleventh Illinois disembarked immediately, and attempted to storm the position of the enemy, but were repulsed with a loss of five men killed and twenty-eight wounded. The gunboats opened an effective fire upon the enemy while the infantry remembarked, and the fleet ran the blockade in the night, with a loss of six men wounded. From this time there was continued skirmishing along the river till the 9th, when our forces reached Yazoo City, where a detachment surprised and captured five Rebel pickets.

On the 11th, Col. COATES rembarked and proceeded up the river to Greenwood, and found Fort Pemberton evacuated by the enemy. The First Missouri Cavalry, Col. OSMANI commanding, went out from this point, had a fight, lost five men, and went to within five miles of Grenada; and ascertaining that FORREST was at that place in force, retraced his steps and joined the main command.

Several days were spent in loading cotton which was found along the river shore, and after having secured sixteen hundred bales, the expedition returned to Yazoo City on the 28th. Immediately upon arriving there Major COOK went out with a small cavalry force, and encountered a brigade of Texas cavalry, numbering fifteen hundred, commanded by Brig.-Gen. L. S. ROSS. A sharp fight ensued, in which Major COOK lost nineteen prisoners, and Col. JONES, of the Texas cavalry, was killed. On the next morning, while out on a reconnoissance, a party of our troops found eight of the bodies of colored soldiers taken prisoners the day before. The clothing was stripped from their bodies and all were shot through the head.

Col. COATES established his headquarters in the town, and eight companies of his regiment, commanded by Maj. MCKEE, took possession of the earthwork on a commanding point a half mile distant from the city. Thus matters stood till the 4th inst., when Gen. ROSS sent in a communication, asking what would be the treatment of prisoners if taken by negro soldiers. Col. COATES replied that they would be treated with the respect due prisoners of war.

On the night of the 4th, ROSS was reinforced by a brigade of Tennessee troops, numbering 500 men, commanded by Brig.-Gen. R. V. RICHARDSON; and at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 5th an attack was made upon Major MCKEE, who held the redoubt, while a portion of the enemy went to the left, flanking his position, and entered the town, and came within twenty feet of Col. COATES' headquarters before they received a check from our men, who were pouring a deadly fire upon them from the windows. Here was almost a hand-to-hand conflict, which lasted four hours, when finally our sharpshooters had picked off all their gunners and completely silenced the guns which had riddled Col. COATES' headquarters with shot and shell at a range of only a few paces, and the rebels began to fall back. A light field-piece had been sent from the gunboat Mahoness to the town, so when the fight began; but the squad sent with it ran at about the first fire, and permitted it to fall into the hands of the enemy, who only had it a moment till some of the Eleventh boys retook it and manned it through the fight.

While the fight was progressing in the town, the rebels had Major MCKEE completely surrounded, and were throwing shot and shell into his works with terrible precision. After they had, as they supposed, obtained every advantage, RICHARDSON sent a message to Major MCKEE, saying they had taken all the rest prisoners, and demanded his surrender. The Major replied to him that he had "no idea of doing any such thing, but that if he wanted them to come and get them." They renewed the attack, and several times came up within a few paces of the earthwork, and were so often repulsed with heavy loss. A second message came from Gen. RICHARDSON, demanding an immediate surrender, saying that "for God's and humanity's sake, he ought to surrender—that he would not be answerable for the actions of his men if they had to take the place by assault, and that he would storm it and take it in ten minutes." The Major replied to him "that he had better come and take them, that they never would surrender—that he might storm and be ——." He further told him that he was sorry his demand was coupled with such a threat, that if the fight went on with that understanding, he should kill every man he captured.

At this juncture, our forces in the city had it all their own way, and were driving the enemy rapidly before them, and a general rout of the enemy ensued, and the fight ended at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Our loss was one Lieutenant and seven men killed, twenty-four wounded, and thirteen prisoners in the Eleventh Illinois; and the colored troops lost two commissioned officers killed, four wounded, ten enlisted men killed, sixty-one wounded, and six missing.

The redoubt held by Major MCKEE was one hundred and fifty feet square, and during the fight, over fifty shell exploded inside the works. Col. COATES' fighting force was seven hundred men; that of the enemy, according to their own admission, twenty-three hundred. Major MCKEE, formerly of the 6th, regular troops, was killed within twenty feet of Col. COATES' door. The loss of the enemy is not known, but it was far greater than ours.

All speak in terms of the highest praise of the gallantry of Major MCKEE, of the Eleventh Illinois, and Major COOK, of the First Missouri. All did their duty nobly; but I have no space to relate individual acts of heroism. Lieut.-Col. FRANKLIN, of the Eighth Louisiana Infantry, led his troops in the most gallant manner, and the colored soldiers fought like devils. There seemed to be a mutual understanding between them and the enemy that they should take no prisoners.

This is considered here by military men, as it certainly was, one of the most gallant and successful struggles of the war on our part, and, therefore, I have given greater space to it than I should otherwise have done. The enemy had eight field pieces in the fight—our troops one small one!

IMPORTANT ARREST.—On Saturday last THOMAS CONCORAN, of this village, was arrested on a warrant issued by ROBERT MURRAY, Esq., United States District-Attorney, New-York City, on a charge of counselling and by force of arms resisting the execution of the act entitled "An act enrolling and calling out the national forces and for other purposes," or, in other words, resisting the draft. Our readers will remember that during the riots in New-York, in July last, a parcel of men and boys gathered together in this village, and after marching to the office of the Provost-Marshal and turning the furniture, etc., out of doors, and threatening the life of the Marshal and others who were in the employ of the Government, they turned toward the building where a large quantity of Government property was stored, consisting of soldiers' clothing and accoutrements, bursting in the door, and, after throwing in the street, burned and stole upward of $2,000 worth. The accused was the leader of this riot and was the man who forced open the door and in other ways assisted in destroying the property. CONCORAN, a few days after the riot, left the place, and, as it was said, went to Ireland. He returned a few days ago and was arrested as above stated. He was taken before the Marshal of New-York and admitted to bail in the sum of $500 to appear for examination.—Jamaica (L. I.) Farmer.

THE CROPS IN VIRGINIA.—In many parts of the State we hear that the wheat crop has been seriously damaged by the severe weather of the past Winter. It is said, too, that this is the case in some of the great wheat growing regions of the West. We would urge upon all our farmers, in view of the probability of at least a partial failure of the next wheat crop, to plant as great a breadth of corn as they possibly can. It will all be needed before another year.—Wheeling Intelligencer, May 19.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

Gen Grant and the Call for 200,000 Men Discussed.

We have received our files of Richmond papers from Mirch 11 to March 21. They furnish the following interesting extracts:

RECEPTION OF PAROLED PRISONERS.

SPEECHES BY JEFF. DAVIS AND "EXTRA BILLY" SMITH.

The paroled prisoners which Gen. BUTLER sent up from Fortress Monroe a few days ago, had a grand time upon their arrival. A procession conducted them to Capitol square, and JEFF. DAVIS was called on for a speech. Taking his stand on the platform of the Washington monument, he welcomed the soldiers to their native land. He had often heard of the severe trials to which they had been subjected in their captivity, and his heart had yearned for the brave "boys" who had proved true under every trial, and had resisted every offer made to them to desert the fortunes of their country. Though they had passed through a many bitter trials, there were, he thought, many yet in store for them, for he knew that they would need secrets from women that they would all assist in achieving the independence of the country, and in driving away the hated foe now polluting our soil. [Cheers.] After a brief respite, said the President, you will be again called to the battle-field. "I know you will come." [Responsive shouts and cheers.] He hoped that they would all find their families better provided for than they might expect to do. The President closed by invoking the blessing of God upon those he addressed.

Gov. SMITH was then called for and addressed the assemblage at some length. He cordially welcomed the returned officers and soldiers; was glad to see them looking so well, and knew their hearts were strong to do their duty in their bleeding and suffering country. The Governor remarked that he was not the eulogist of the President, but it was but just to say that no man was more devoted to the success of the cause, or worked harder to insure that success. He had not responded to the popular clamor for conscription against the foe because he knew that he would thereby sacrifice your lives. He forebore his tenderness to the soldiers we had in the hands of the enemy. [Cheers.]

From every point the signs are auspicious, animating and cheering. Our armies everywhere have evinced a glorious determination to "do or die," and you have come to add your strength to theirs. Let us look forward with hope. Let us all do our duty, and all will be well. [Cheers.] The grand Spring campaign, which the enemy had undertaken with promises of astounding results, had crumbled into dust. SHERMAN had retreated in shame and with disaster. PARRAGUT's naval undertaking had utterly failed; and, without going further into specifications, he would advert to the late raid upon this city. Was there ever in the world an enterprise gotten up as this expedition was, that had terminated so ingloriously? [Cheers and laughter.] Why, they fled at the first fire from our citizen soldiers. The enemy did not stay long enough for us to grapple with them. At the first show of opposition on the Brooke Road, KILPATRICK fled off to the left, and made his way toward the Peninsula. He had bet $5,000 that he would get into Richmond. If he had dared bravely to attempt what he had promised to do—if he had only given us a fair chance—he might have won his bet, but he would have arrived here as a prisoner—not as a conqueror. [Cheers.]

The Governor expressed his preference for the battle-field, and was ready at any moment to encounter the foe, and sacrificing life for the sake of his country's rights. [Cheers.] He believed that it would not be long before we witnessed the end of the war, and the establishment of the Confederacy among the nations of the earth. He invoked harmony, and ridiculed the critics who found fault with our officers, and yet deny to their country the benefit of their own large military experience. [Laughter.] They should be placed in the front rank of the army, where they would learn something of the art of war. [Cheers.] The Governor then referred to the substitute-printers who had been required by Congress to report for duty. I know, he said, (addressing the soldiers,) what a frolic you will have over them when they arrived in camp. [Laughter.] Upon them, said he, I shall not expend my sympathy. The Governor told his hearers that he wanted them to win new laurels, and then, at the close of the war, when they returned home, perhaps with a leg or an arm gone, they would talk to the "old woman," and tell the children, who would slumber around their knee, how they put it to the Yankees there, or put it to them there. [Laughter.] They tell me, said the Governor, that I am getting old, but where there is a Yankee or a woman to be met, I wish it understood that I am only twenty-five. [Laughter.] The Governor soon after concluded his remarks. "Three cheers" were then given by the crowd, and the band played "Dixie."

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1863 IN MISSISSIPPI.

GEN. JOHNSTON'S OFFICIAL REPORT.

From the Richmond Dispatch.

The official report of Gen. JOSEPH E. JOHNSTON, of his operations in Mississippi, although called for by Congress on the 15th of December last, has only made its appearance in print within the past few days. In referring to it at present, it is not for us to attempt to account for the delay in its publication. Many of the facts embraced in this report have already been given to the public in the synopsis of the correspondence between Gen. JOHNSTON and the Government authorities at Richmond. Passing over them, we come to the dispatches between Gen. JOHNSTON and Lieut.-Gen. PEMBERTON, with reference to the operations around Vicksburg.

On the 9th of May Gen. JOHNSTON, then at Tullahoma, received a dispatch from the Secretary of War, requesting information of what he (Johnston) was to take chief command of the forces there. On the 13th of the same month he received a dispatch from Gen. PEMBERTON, dated Vicksburgh, May 12, asking for reinforcements, as the enemy, in large force, was moving from the Mississippi, south of the Big Black, apparently in the direction of Edward's Depot, and expressing the belief that that point would be the battle-field, if he could forward sufficient force, leaving troops enough to secure the safety of Vicksburgh.

On the 15th, Gen. Johnston dispatched Gen. PEMBERTON, notifying him of his arrival at Jackson, informing him of the occupation of Clinton by a portion of GRANT's army, and urged the importance of reestablishing communications, ordering him to come up, if practicable, on SHERMAN's rear at once, and adding: "To hold such a detachment would be of immense value. The troops here could cooperate. All the cavalry you can quickly assemble should be brought. Time is all important."

Subsequently, Gen. Johnston ordered Gen. PEMBERTON to evacuate Vicksburgh and to take the road leading to Clinton. This order was disregarded. In concluding his report, Gen. JOHNSTON says:

Convinced of the impossibility of collecting a sufficient force to break the investment of Vicksburgh, should it be completed—appreciating the difficulty of extricating the garrison, and convinced that Vicksburg and Port Hudson had lost most of their value by the repeated passage of armed vessels and transports, I ordered the evacuation of both places. Gen. GARDNER did not receive this order before the investment of Port Hudson, if at all. Gen. PEMBERTON did not obey order, under the advice of a council of war; and though he had in Vicksburg eight thousand fresh troops, not demoralized by defeat, I believed that it was impossible to withdraw the army from this position, with such morale and material as to be of further service to the Confederacy, or but to hold Vicksburgh so long as possible, with the sign hung that the Government may yet be able to credit me in leaving this important key to the free navigation of the Mississippi River." Vicksburgh was greatly imperilled when my instructions from Tullahoma, to concentrate, were neglected. It was lost when my orders of the 12th and 15th of May were disobeyed. To this loss was added the labor, privations and certain sickness of a gallant army, when my orders for its evacuation were set aside.

In this report I have been compelled to enter into many details, and to make some animadversions upon the conduct of Gen. PEMBERTON. The one was no pleasant task—the other a most painful duty. Both have been forced upon me by the official report of Gen. PEMBERTON, made to the War Department in much of it to me, to whom it was due.

Gen. PEMBERTON, by direct assertion and by implication, puts upon me the responsibility of the movement which led his army to defeat at Baker's Creek and Big Black Bridge—defeats which produced the loss of Vicksburgh and its army.

This statement has been circulated by the press, in more or less detail, and with more or less marks of an official character, until my silence would be almost an acknowledgment of the justice of the charge.

A proper regard for the good opinion of my Government has compelled me, therefore, to throw aside that delicacy which I would gladly have observed toward a brother officer, suffering much undeserved obloquy, and to show that in his short campaign, Gen. Pemberton made not a single movement in obedience to my orders, and regarded none of my instructions; and, finally, did not embrace the only opportunity to save his army, that given by my order to abandon Vicksburgh.

ANOTHER RAID BY AVERILL ANTICIPATED.

From the Richmond Whig, March 17.

Information has been received at Fincastle, from the West, that AVERILL, with large reinforcements, is preparing for another raid into that section. The enemy apparently despairing of accomplishing anything in Virginia with the "Grand Army of the Potomac," seems to have abandoned the policy of pitched battles, and concluded to try what virtue (secrets is frequent and extensive raids. Unable to break through the living wall of brave men on the line of the Rapidan, the Regency at Washington are endeavoring to undermine it by stratagem.

This intelligence, comes in apparently reliable shape, and the authorities, forewarned, will doubtless be prepared to give them a suitable reception. The adventurous AVERILL will try to repair the disastrous failure of KILPATRICK's expedition, but there is no reason why his should not end in the same manner. These raiders come commissioned to do the deeds of land pirates, and all who are captured should meet the fate their abuses of the laws of civilized warfare deserve.

ANOTHER INVASION HINTED AT.

The Charleston Mercury argues against an attempt, which it claims will soon be repeated, to invade Pennsylvania. It says:

"Our previous advance into Pennsylvania was the very thing the Lincoln Government wanted. They could not raise troops, and the war fever was dying out in the United States. Our invasion of Pennsylvania rekindled the war spirit, and enabled LINCOLN to raise the troops he wanted. The United States are now in the same condition they were then. The greater part of their troops in the field go out of the service in May. They have refused to reenlist to so great an extent that President LINCOLN has ordered a conscription of a half million of men more, to fill their places in the ranks of their armies. The campaign of this spring proves the reluctance of the soldiers in their armies to prosecute the war. If things continue as they are, there will be no volunteers, and the new conscripts will be reluctant and few, and in all probability we will be victorious throughout the Summer, and win peace and independence by the Fall. But if we invade Pennsylvania, the same result will, in all probability, be produced again. Our enemies will again fill up their armies, and prolong the war. We will do exactly what President LINCOLN longs for—prays for—if such a blasphemous wretch can pray. He would hail our advance into Pennsylvania with triumphant joy, as a sort of providential intervention in his favor. It is exactly what he would do, if he had the disposition of our armies. The sweet sort of wisdom is that which follows events. It is the wisdom of experience, not of anticipation. Shall we be destitute of even this sort of wisdom, which may inspire and direct the weakest understanding?

VIRGINIA AND THE WAR.

From the Richmond Whig.

A comparison of the census of 1860 and 1863 shows that of the number of slaves in the entire State in 1860, only 3,603 have been lost since then, above natural propagation and other causes.

Of horses, in that portion of the State under our control, we have lost 25,201.

In 1860, the number of cattle returned for taxation in the entire State was 1,621,125, or ninety-seven for every one hundred white persons. In 1863, the number of cattle within the territory, free from the occupation and incursions of the public enemy, was 907,152, to which add 8 per cent., the usual difference between the actual and taxable numbers, and we have 547,724 cattle within our control in the last mentioned year, which is one hundred and five head of cattle to every one hundred white inhabitants.

The returns show an increase of 73,336 sheep, and a loss of 136,970 hogs in the counties and corporations under our control.

SHERMAN'S RAID.

The Richmond Whig of March 18 says:

The rolling stock from the Mississippi and Alabama Road is being transferred to the Mobile and Ohio, to operate the upper end of that road until it is completed through again, which it will be in less than thirty days. Heavy forces are at work on all the damaged roads to repair the breaks.

The same paper says, in a later issue:

The Mobile and Ohio Railroad is again open to Quitman, Mississippi, and it is thought will soon be open to Okolona. The work of repairing the damage done by SHERMAN is progressing with vigor.

FOOD AND FINANCE.

FUNDING TREASURY NOTES.

From the Richmond Whig, March 21.

The amount of Treasury notes funded in Petersburgh, up to 1 o'clock yesterday, was $2,500,000, with numerous applications still pending. The amount funded in Columbus, Ga., at last report, was $1,250,000. The Sun says the large corporations have not yet commenced funding; when they do, the aggregate sum will be very large.... The Petersburgh Register says that between 30,000 and 310,000 are now in process of disbursement in the way of dividend among the shareholders in the stock of the City of Petersburgh Steamboat—an immense dividend.... The Lynchburgh Republican says the money market in that city is growing "tight," and is declined before many weeks are past to be much tighter.... The Mobile Register of the 11th reports a sale of gold in that city the previous day at 16 for 1.

A gentleman who has recently returned from a trip to the United States, ascertained, from good authority, that the gold which the Yankee papers claim to be in the Treasury vaults, is not there at all—Secretary CHASE having long since thrown the bulk of it upon the market clandestinely, at different times, to keep down the premium. His anxiety for the passage of the bill authorizing the sale of the gold was to obtain the sanction of Congress to an act already committed. The Yankees are too cute to be long bamboozled by such trickery, and we therefore look for a sharp reaction after the premium of gold in Wall-street has been reduced 15 or 20 per cent. under the influence of CHASE's gold bill.

"PRICES TEMBLING."

Two sales took place in Petersburgh on Friday, March 12, at which the following prices ruled, as reported in the city papers:

Common tobacco, from 45c. to 50c. ℔.; medium, 55c. to $1 10; do. good to prime, $2 to $4 ℔ lb.; table salt, 45c. ℔ lb.; quinine, $75 ℔ oz.; nails, $175 ℔ keg; brown sugar, excellent quality, $3 ℔ lb.; loaf do., $4 75 ℔ lb.; coffee, $11 25 ℔ lb.; cognac brandy, $60 ℔ gallon; peach do., $40 ℔ gallon; apple brandy, $61 ℔ gallon; striped domestics, from $6 ℔ to $7 10 ℔ yard; 4-4 bleached cotton, $3 75 ℔ yard; 4-4 unbleached, $4 40 ℔ yard; brown sugar, $7 50 to $8 ℔ lb.; package pins, $15 50; black thread, $15 50; sorghum molasses, $32 25 ℔ gallon.

The rapid decline in the sugar market is attributed to the fact that the price had been run up beyond the means of the community in general to purchase.

In Lynchburg, Virginia, on March 19, a beautiful article of coffee sugar, sold in 100 pound parcels at ℔ 50. In Petersburgh, Va., Friday, cotton shirting sold at $5 50 per yard, and osnaburgs at $3 50@$4 25. In Augusta, Georgia, in the public market, pork is selling at $1 50@$3 ℔ lb., and meat at $1 40@$2. Corn meal is quoted at $13@$15 ℔ bushel.

The Augusta, Ga., Chronicle says: We are happy to note a sensible decline in the price of the necessaries of life in this market. Yesterday morning good beef sold at $1 40 to $1 ℔ per pound, and the market was well supplied. Pork was also plenty, at $1 50 to $3 per pound.

Corn in the ear sold yesterday from wagons at $12 per bushel—a decline of $2. Corn meal sold at $14 to $15 per bushel; considerable was purchased at the former figures.

THE COMING CAMPAIGN.

From the Richmond Whig, March 26.

We have pretty positive information that the enemy's force is almost nothing in Missouri, and that Gen. PRICE believes this is his opportunity to march his victorious troops to rescue and redeem their State. Gen. BANKS' army is not only below its usual complement in numbers, but is sadly demoralized, and the Yankees are speculating upon an early visit from Gen. LEE across the Potomac. A force must be kept in Kentucky, for the Yankees know that MORGAN is free, and mounting with his troopers, each armed with a pair of scissors in addition to their rifles and revolvers. Meanwhile, Yankee enlistments are expiring, and the veterans are generally tired of the war and going out, while the last draft has not supplied their place, and the new draft not yet executed. How then can the Yankee armies be strong enough for offensive movements on a grand scale? With Grant, too to say is an indispensable requisite to his tactics. He is a lucky manager of brute force, and has at last to face his master in the art of war. Instead of that overwhelming invasion we have all been looking for with so much breathless anxiety, we shall not be surprised to see the enemy taking the defensive, and the gray coats pushing forward to fight for and recover the ground from which they were crowded in the last campaign. We should not be surprised, if the figures would be compared, that the Confederate offensive force in the field to-day is equal to that of the foe; and when that is the case, what Confederate ever needs a surer guarantee of victory?

WHAT REMAINS OF THE WAR.

From the Richmond Whig.

From this time forward, we have a right to expect a continual improvement in the Confederate cause, and a corresponding deterioration in that of the enemy. Our currency, under the salutary provisions of the last Congress, must grow better and better daily, while that of the enemy, under the absorption of gold, the augmenting expenses of the Government, and the increasing issues of promises to pay, must grow worse and worse. So, too, of the respective armies. The military act keeps all of our troops in service, embracing the youthful ardor, chivalry and patriotism of the country, trained, seasoned, skilled in the art of fighting, the art of inflicting the greatest injury upon the enemy while receiving the least amount of injury themselves—while the army of the enemy, now on the verge of losing its veterans, will soon contain nothing better than negroes, European mercenaries, substitutes, and conscripts too worthless to pay, or have paid for them, the insignificant sum allowed to purchase exemption. Our army, like our currency, will grow better every day, full as it will be by the warm, young blood of the country pouring into it all the time its ennobling ardor, and growing every day more hardened to the toils and exposures of war, and more capable of inflicting damage on the foe. While they, on the other hand, will lose by replacement their best troops, and be left to depend on the low wretches who may be hired for the work of slaughter or may be unable to buy themselves exemption from it. While thus our currency and our army are improving and theirs deteriorating, we will, by every day the war is prolonged, be demonstrating more conclusively to the world the inability of the enemy to conquer us, and our ability to establish our independence. The judgment of the world will therefore settle, day by day, more in our favor, and day by day note against our enemy. Thus, in moral as well as in physical power, we will be gaining, while they are losing. And, as time passes, these forces will all increase, in arithmetical progression, until our success will be rendered too palpably sure for even the heartiest and purblind to doubt it. In this way, even should there be no intervention from abroad, or no sudden uprising of the anti-war party among the enemy, we may safely conclude that the hour of relief, of triumph, and peace is not so far distant but that we may command strength to stand till it comes.

THE AMNESTY.

From the Richmond Dispatch.

What are the terms which ABRAHAM LINCOLN offers? He exempts from his amnesty a host of the best citizens of the South in the army and in civil life. To others he offers a free pardon upon condition that they will take an oath not only of allegiance to the United States but of obedience to all the proclamations of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, and to all the abolition decrees of his Black Republican Congress. And these terms he offers not to acknowledge rebels but to sovereign States; not to a crushed rebellion but to a powerful Government, which has the field an army so strong that, after calling for more than two millions of men to crush it, and failing in the effort, he is now calling for half a million more in the same breath that he professes to treat the Confederacy as a conquered people.

Is it not evident upon the mere statement of the case that Lincoln's amnesty was never expected or designed by himself to have any other effect than irritation and insult to the Southern people? No one, however, knows better than ABRAHAM LINCOLN, that any terms he might offer the Southern people which contemplate their restoration to his bloody and brutal Government, would be rejected with scorn and execration. If, instead of desiring to depose our President and military and civil officers, he had proposed to make Jeff. Davis his successor, Lee Commander-in-Chief of the Yankee armies, and our domestic institutions not only recognized at home but re-adopted in the Free States, provided the South would once more enter the Yankee Union, there is not a man, woman or child in the Confederacy who would not spit upon the proposition. We desire no compromise upon any terms with a nation, whose Government, upon the mere statement of its atrocities in this war have caused the whole civilized world to shudder, must keep henceforth their distance. They shall not be our masters, and we would not have them for our slaves.

GEN. GRANT.

From the Richmond Whig.

Gen. GRANT has only once—at Shiloh—encountered a master in the art of war, and then he was terribly frightened—cost by the success he won. He has never gotten into battle in open fight with a less advantage than three or four times as many men as were opposed to him. He has not proved himself a great General, but he has shown quickness, tenacity, the power to wield brute force with effect, and aptness in taking advantage of Confederate folly. In his next fight he must confront either JOHNSTON or LEE, where neither lack of vigilance, nor lack of ability, nor lack of men will give him the advantages he has enjoyed on other occasions. We are of the opinion that after such encounter the laudations of him in the Yankee papers will afford the most laughable bits of reading on record.

The new Napoleon of the North is having a very fine time just now. Like all the other Napoleons, his Elba is not far ahead of him.

MEETING OF THE UNION STATE CONVENTION—THE NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION INDORSED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, March 25.

Sailed, ship William Chamberlain, for Callao.

The Union State Convention organized at Sacramento, yesterday, by the election of WILLIAM H. SEARS, Chairman, by 45 majority over W. H. PARKE, (Anti-Congress candidate.) The whole vote cast amounted to 237.

To-day the convention unanimously adopted a resolution praising the National Administration, declaring LINCOLN the first choice for the next President, and indorsing Messrs. CONNESS, HUNT, SHANNON, and COLE, of the California delegation, in Congress.

A separate resolution in memory of the Rev. T. STARR KING was adopted by a standing vote, all the members rising from their seats in silence.

The delegates to the Baltimore Convention have not yet been elected; but doubtless the majority of them will be friends of Mr. CONNESS.

The Queen of Pennsylvania.

HARRISBURGH, Friday, March 25.

An investigation of the official figures discloses the fact that when Pennsylvania is given credit for enlistments in the regular army and marine service and the navy, her quota under the call for 300,000 men will be nearly, if not quite, full. The statement that the deficiency of Pennsylvania was 74,000 is incorrect; that being the entire number of men due from the State under all the calls, allowing no credit for veteran volunteers and new recruits since Jan. 31. Gov. CURTIN has dispatched his military Secretary to Washington to procure an official correction of the misstatement which has done much to discourage the people and retard recruiting.

From Bermuda.

The steamship Alpha arrived at Halifax on the 23d, with dates from St. Thomas to the 14th, and Bermuda 19th inst. She has no tidings of the Re Gaditanos.

BERMUDA, Saturday, March 19.

The blockade-runners City of Petersburgh, Advance and Index arrived here only one half hour previous to that of the United States steamer Shenandoah, which arrived on the 17th and sailed on the 18th inst. for Norfolk.

From New-Jersey.

TRENTON, Friday, March 25.

The resolutions declaring the views of the Legislature in regard to the attempt, on the part of Congress, to interfere with the laws of New-Jersey, by annulling franchises granted to the railroads in this State, were passed by a vote of 17 to 3 in the Senate, and by a unanimous vote in the House.

Both Houses have adjourned to Monday night.

FINANCIAL PLANS OF MR. SECRETARY CHASE.

WASHINGTON, Friday, March 25.

GOLD NOTES TO BE ISSUED IN PAYMENT OF DUTIES.

Secretary CHASE is understood to be making arrangements for the issue of gold notes, receivable for duties, which he proposes to pay for the interest falling due on April 1, May 1, July 1, August 19, October 1, November 1, 1864, and January 1, 1865, without rebate on interest due on and before July 1, and with rebate at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum on interest due after that date. The aggregate of interest coming due at these dates is about $49,000,000, of which it is supposed that about $25,000,000 will be anticipated in this way, making a virtual addition of nearly that amount to the stock of gold. The Secretary also has under consideration the expediency of receiving National Currency at rates slightly below the current value of gold, and of issuing therefor Assistant Treasurers Certificates receivable in payment of duties.

Gen. PLEASONTON has been relieved from the command of his cavalry corps, and is ordered to report to Gen. ROSECRANS.

THE WILKES COURT-MARTIAL.

Testimony for prosecution in WILKES' Court-martial, concluded to-day. SAMUEL WILKESON, former correspondent NEW-YORK TIMES, was the last witness examined. He testified that the letter of Commodore WILKES, to the Secretary of the Navy, was received on Saturday, Dec. 19, at the TIMES Office here.

RETURN OF OFFICERS AND MEN TO THEIR REGIMENTS.

Orders have been issued directing all officers and men on duty at various headquarters, whose services are not positively needed there, to repair at once to their respective regiments.

The number of officers and men belonging to the Army of the Potomac reported as being on special duty or detached service has become so great as to call forth an order from Gen. MEADE on the subject, looking to a correction of the evil. All detachments in full equipments of men for active service are also ordered to be promptly supplied.

THE DISMISSAL OF COL. NELSON.

The finding of the Court of Inquiry at Fortress Monroe, which declared Col. JOHN A. NELSON, Tenth United States Colored Troops, deficient in capacity and negligent in preventing the impressment of negroes by his officers, has been approved by Gen. BUTLER, and he has been mustered out of service.

CAPTURE OF A RICHMOND BROKER.

A broker belonging in Richmond was captured a few days since with over fifty thousand dollars in United States notes in his possession, and lodged in the Old Capitol.

A CHANGE OF QUARTERS AND RATIONS FOR ARMY CLERKS.

Numerous clerks in the various bureaus here, who are detached from their regiments, have been much exercised by the report that the commutation money allowed them is to be withheld and Government quarters and rations provided them. It is affirmed that this arrangement would save the Government half a million annually.

ARRIVAL OF DESERTERS.

Deserters from rebeldom continue to arrive. Sixty or over were sent North to-day to be released on taking the oath. Nearly 400 have been released within the last two weeks on the same condition.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE SICK AND WOUNDED.

Hospitals here have received considerable accessions from the Army of the Potomac, whose accommodations for sick and wounded are being prepared for prospective emergencies. Ambulances and all the category of necessaries for disabled soldiers have been put in perfect order. With a view to systematize returns of casualties, Surgeon-Gen. BARNES directs that medical officers of commands engaged in action shall promptly make report to the medical officer of the army, who in like manner must report the consolidated return to the Surgeon-General.

Gens. STEES and NEWTON, arrived here to-night, en route to join their commands in the South-west.

DISPATCHES TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Friday, March 25.

CAPTURE OF GUERRILLAS.

Col. WELLS, Provost-Marshal-General at Alexandria, sent out a party of Company D, of the First Michigan Cavalry, dismounted, on Wednesday evening, under command of Lieut. JENKINS, in search of guerrillas. They went by steamer to Freestone Point, and from thence through woods about ten miles, where they captured Capt. HARNEGAN, the well-known guerrilla chieftain, and three men, six shot-guns, muskets and rifles, three revolvers, one horse, and returned safely this morning. HARNEGAN is a dangerous man. He has often boasted he would not be captured alive. There was found upon him passes and permits from the rebel authorities permitting him to go where he pleased within the enemy's lines.

GEN. STEES' FAREWELL TO HIS COMMAND.

Gens. STEES and FRENCH arrived here this afternoon from the army.

On taking leave of his command, Gen. STEES issued the following order:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS, March 24, 1864.

GENERAL ORDER No. 5.—Soldiers of the Fifth Army Corps: By direction of War Department I am relieved from duty with the Army of the Potomac.

In obeying an order so wholly unexpected, I part from you with the profoundest regret. We have been associated since your organization as a corps. We have shared all the campaigns of this glorious army; and for nine months it has been my pride and distinction to be your chief. The history of your achievements adds a lustre to the history of your country, and in the great battle of the war on the 2d of July, 1863, your heroism and valor indisputably saved the day.

I part from you, feeling assured that your manly virtues, courage, and patriotism will still be conspicuous in campaigns to come, and that the insignia borne upon your flags and worn upon your breasts will in the shock of battle always be found in the thick of your country's foes.

(Signed) GEORGE STEES,
Major-General Commanding.

TRANSFER OF SEAMEN.

Seamen in the army who desire to be transferred to the navy should make application by letter to the Navy Department.

DISMISSED FROM THE ARMY.

The President to-day dismissed Col. WOLFORD, of Kentucky, from the United States service for certain sentiments expressed by him at a recent sword presentation in that State.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Friday, March 25.

A COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The Vice-President submitted to the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, in obedience to a resolution of the Senate of the 15th inst., including a report from the Secretary of State, in relation to the establishment of a monarchical Government in Central and South America. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

EXPEDITION TO EASTERN ASIA.

Mr. ANTHONY, of Rhode Island, (Union,) presented resolutions of the Legislature of Rhode Island, in favor of Surgeon McGOWAN's projected expedition to Eastern Asia. Referred.

ILLINOIS SHIP CANAL.

Mr. TRUMBULL, of Illinois, (Union,) introduced a bill to construct a Ship Canal from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, for the passage of armed and naval vessels.

Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF EMIGRATION.

Mr. POWELL, of Kentucky, (Dem.,) called up his resolution requesting the President to furnish the Senate the report of the Commissioner of Emigration for 1863, with an account of existing contracts, and other information concerning emigrants. Adopted.

AID TO INDIAN REFUGEES.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, of Wisconsin, (Union,) introduced a bill to aid the Indian Refugees to return to their homes in the Indian Territory.

Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXPENSES OF SURVEYS.

Mr. HARLAN, of Iowa, (Union,) introduced a joint resolution explanatory of the tenth section of the "Act to reduce the expenses of surveys of lands of the United States." By a defect in the law, money deposited in accordance with its provisions to pay for surveys, cannot be paid out without an appropriation, and his resolution affords a remedy.

THE SALES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HARLAN reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, a bill to extend the eighth section of an "Act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights." Its design was to extend to Kansas the benefit of that bill, with authority to devote the income accruing to the support of the Common Schools.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

Mr. COLLAMER, of Vermont, (Union,) introduced a bill authorizing the Postmaster-General to contract for carrying the mails overland from Atchison, in Kansas, to Folsoms, in California, appropriating a million dollars annually—the transit to occupy sixteen days during eight months, and twenty days during four months of the year. The Pacific Railroad, as fast as completed, will take the place of the overland mail service.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE IN ELECTIONS.

The Senate proceeded to the unfinished business of yesterday, viz.: the bill to prevent military interference in the elections.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, (Dem.,) said that the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HOWARD) had said that the time was inappropriate for the passage of such a bill as this. He would comment thus: said others who thought like him, (meaning himself,) and others who thought like him, (meaning those who, when the rights of the English subjects were at stake, rose in his place in Parliament and declared to discuss questions of war so long as private rights were in jeopardy. Under these constant encroachments of power, we shall wake up hereafter, and find that the dream we have been indulging in was a delusion. He said the Senator from Michigan lays down the broad proposition that the military orders concerning elections are law, and therefore the proclamation of the Governor of Maryland was a usurpation of power. Yet strangely he compliments the man who never was the Governor of the State of Delaware by the voice of the people, but was set over them by the force of the bayonet, because he issued a proclamation for the people to be scrupulously obedient to the orders of their master, Gen. SCHENCK. If the soil of Maryland had been polluted with blood, as the Senator indicated it might have been, against whom would the deed account stand? Not against Gen. SCHENCK, or the officers; but against him who set enthroned at the other end of the avenue, and Mr. Gen. CAMERON, and others, conducted affairs. In regard to military interference in his own State he quoted from a volume of three hundred pages of sworn testimony taken before a Committee of the Delaware Legislature. The Governor says that he had no official information that troops would be sent into the State at the election of 1862; yet on the eve of the day of election every village of the State was filled with soldiery. They swarmed at every poll except one or two on the day of election. Where did they come from and for what purpose? He denied that there had been any trouble in that State demanding their presence. The only authority for executing the laws of the State was intrusted to the Governor, a Commander-in-Chief, except when he seeks the protection of the Federal Government; yet, because that State was small and feeble in numbers, (but not in patriotism of her men,) these troops were sent among them. Besides the testimony of Mayor GILPIN, of Wilmington, and others who had never been Democrats, to show that it had been STUFFED polarized, and unless force was provided, the State would go for the Democracy. And Provost-Marshals had commissions signed by EDWIN M. STANTON, and sent in blank, accompanied by orders, and yet the Secretary of War denies that any orders had been sent direct from his department. He could not show those orders, but the testimony would prove this crime on the Secretary to the satisfaction of a jury of twelve honest men. The blank commissions, it is believed by several of the Provost-Marshals, who are of course Republicans, were filled up on the Sunday preceding the Tuesday election by Gaunon F. Fusse, the Republican candidate for Congress, and now a Judge of the Supreme Court of the district. He wished to let the country know that we had a Secretary of War who sent out blank commissions on the eve of election and allowed partisan commissions to fill them; after this, talk not of the purity of elections. This was partisanship of the basest kind, and would be mourned by all patriotic and honest men. He concluded by upon the President's proclamation in Gen. SHERMAN in reference to the qualifications of voters in Arkansas. They were to be permitted to vote under their State Constitution, as modified by the President, provided too they would support his proclamation!

Mighty man! Oh! what need is there on which our modern CAESAR feeds, that he has grown so great! He quoted at length from PLUTARCH's Life of Pompey, and drew a parallel between CAESAR and Lincoln. It would be seen that our President was not the best man in the world who had sent soldiers to influence elections. He did not know whether the President had read PLUTARCH, though he understood that he was well versed in SHAKESPEARE, and considered the passage "On! my offence is rank!" one of the best. [Laughter.] He held that there was a fixed purpose and everything to be done to perpetuate the power of the President for four years; and, if this attempt was unrebuked by the people by their votes, the President, with his army, will defy the American people after the next term of four years shall expire. If he does not, he will be an extraordinary man. He appealed from CAESAR to the Senate, and invoked it by that love of constitutional liberty which estimated our fathers, and that love of civil liberty which caused the effusion of such precious blood in the Revolution, to save us from the impending military despotism.

THE WEST POINT ACADEMY BILL.

The Senate agreed to the report of the Committee of Conference on the West Point Academy Bill.

Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Friday, March 25.

FRAUDULENT CHANGE OF NAMES OF VESSELS.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, (Union,) from the Committee on Commerce, reported the bill punishing frauds in the change of names of vessels. He asked to be read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, who says the laws are inadequate for the purpose, and that worthless hulks are repaired, offered to be sold or sent on voyages under new names, in the danger of property and the lives of passengers while the old names are left on the stern and new ones are painted on the wheel-house for the purpose of deception. Hence, the necessity for further legislation. The bill provides that in addition to the name as now required to be painted on the stern, the name of the steamer shall be painted on the outside of the pilot-house or outside of the wheel-house in letters not less than six inches high. If any owner or agent of a steamboat shall not comply with this regulation he shall be subjected to the same forfeitures as are now provided for a failure to paint the name and the port to which it belongs on the stern.

No agent or owner shall in any way change the name of his vessel, in order to deceive or attempt to deceive the public, without incurring the forfeiture of the vessel. This act not to take effect until after the lapse of sixty days.

Mr. BEHMAN, of Indiana, (Dem.,) suggested that sailing vessels ought to be included in the provision.

Mr. WASHBURNE replied that there were best reasons for discriminating against sailing vessels. If such a provision, however, could pass unscathed, it could be made in another bill.

The bill was passed.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE LAND GRANTS.

Mr. CLAY, of Kentucky, (Union,) from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back the Senate bill extending the time in which to accept lands heretofore donated for the Agricultural College purposes and including West Virginia in the provisions.

Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana, (Dem.,) offered an amendment authorizing Indiana to appropriate the sixty of the lands for the education of the orphans of soldiers and sailors.

Mr. WASHBURNE moved that Illinois be similarly auth

GENERAL McCLELLAN'S REPORT.

Analysis and Review of his History of his Military Career.

[SEVENTH ARTICLE.]

I.

There is now, we suppose, not the shadow of a doubt that had the Army of the Potomac been simply allowed to walk on up the Peninsula, it would have been able to walk over all the force which Gen. MAGRUDER had to oppose it. We now know how contemptible that force was. Gen. MAGRUDER's official report of his operations on the Peninsula shows that his whole army consisted of eleven thousand men; of these, six thousand were useless to him, being placed in garrison at Gloucester Point, Mulberry Island, etc.: "So that it will be seen," adds he, "that the balance of the line, embracing a length of thirteen miles, was defended by about five thousand men."

What is now a matter of certainty was then a matter of shrewd conjecture. Gen. Wool, whose position at Fortress Monroe gave him every possible information regarding the enemy, repeatedly represented to Gen. McCLELLAN how trifling his force was, and begged him to push on before the rebels should have time to concentrate. But MAGRUDER, disposing his feeble force with admirable skill, moving it about from point to point, and putting forth the wiles and strategems of war, succeeded in so frightening Gen. McCLELLAN that, after a single reconnoissance, he sat down to—dig. "To my utter surprise," says Gen. MAGRUDER, "he permitted day after day to elapse without an assault. In a few days the object of his delay was apparent. In every direction, in front of our lines, through the intervening woods, and along the open fields, earthworks began to appear." Of similar tenor is a conversation which Col. FAIRCHILD, of the Coldstream Guards, who met Gen. MAGRUDER in Texas last Summer, reports in his recent book, Three Months in the Southern States: "He (MAGRUDER) told me," he says, "the different dodges he had resorted to, to blind and deceive McCLELLAN as to his strength; and he spoke of the intense relief and amusement with which he at length saw that General, with his magnificent army, begin to break ground before miserable earthworks defended only by 8,000 men."

Grimly "amusing" though we confess the retrospect of such a spectacle to be, it involves a great deal that is much too humiliating to permit our entirely appreciating it.

Shirking the duty of moving on the rebels at Manassas, General McCLELLAN sought the Peninsula with the express view of making a "rapid" and "brilliant" campaign. His first measure in execution of this campaign is to sit down before the five thousand rebels present to dispute his progress. All that can possibly save this from being hereafter satirized a bit of monstrous burlesque, is that it is vouched for by the irrefragible evidence of history!

If the defensive line which the rebels had constructed across the Isthmus, from Yorktown along the line of the Warwick, was really a position of the enormous strength claimed by Gen. McCLELLAN, we can only say that we should have taken this element into account when he determined on his plan of campaign. It is a lame and impotent excuse for him to put forth that he did not know the rebels had a fortified position on the Peninsula, that he was wholly ignorant of the nature of the topography, that he was not aware that the Warwick River ran in the direction it does, and that he found the roads in a horrible condition. He was repeatedly forewarned that he would find fortifications on the Peninsula just as well as at Manassas; but with that extraordinary levity of mind that characterizes him, he insisted on seeing all rose-colored in the distance, and, exemplifying perfectly the Latin saying, Omne ignotum pro magnifico, the less he knew of the nature of the theatre of war he was about to seek (and he afterward confessed it was a terra incognita to him) the more allurements it had for him.

But, without denying that the position which the rebels held across the Isthmus was one naturally strong, we deny utterly and altogether that it presented anything which need have been any considerable obstacle to the advance of the overwhelming numbers of the Army of the Potomac. The line held by the rebels—the general line of the Warwick, which heads within a mile of Yorktown—was defended by a series of detached redoubts connected by rifle-pits, and it was not less than thirteen miles in extent. Now, all experience proves that a line so extended is only formidable when the works are fully manned, and there is present, beside, a movable force, capable of rapid concentration at any point the enemy may assail. The very length of such a line becomes its weakness; there must be some point at which it can be forced; and this done the works become a disadvantage, rather than a defence. Military history presents no more formidable fortified lines than those of Mehaigne and Borchain, and yet MARLBOROUGH forced these, though defended by a superior French force; and if this could be done in the case of positions held by a superior force, what shall we say of a line held by five thousand against over a hundred thousand? The comparison is not, in no inference as it would be to compare the one General with the other—we mean, of course, a MARLBOROUGH with a McCLELLAN.

On the point of the absolute necessity devolving upon Gen. McCLELLAN to assault the works at Yorktown, the moment he reached and reconnoitered them, there is, indeed, no room for argument. Any one who will inspect the map will see the readiness with which the line of the Warwick might have been forced, and, this once done, Yorktown was turned. And this is the proper place to mention an incident touching the true details of which Gen. McCLELLAN is as reticent as he always is touching anything which in the smallest degree tells against himself. One of the Division Commanders occupying a point where in fact he could force the enemy's line, sent a portion of his command, chiefly Vermont troops, to cross a dam which the rebels had constructed, and assault their position. This they did, and gallantly advancing under heavy fire, actually took possession of the rebel works. But all this was contrary to Gen. McCLELLAN's favorite system of regular approaches, and would have proved that the President's recommendation to pierce the enemy's line, instead of being "simple folly," as McCLELLAN pronounced it, was the highest wisdom. It must have been for this reason—for there is no other to be found—that the brave fellows who had been guilty of this brilliant irregularity, were left utterly without support, and were finally forced to fall back with serious loss! We suppose there is but one man in the world who will not now admit that the "folly" in the siege of Yorktown rested, as it so often does, exclusively where the timidity belonged—and that man is Gen. McCLELLAN. And if it will add anything to the completeness of this demonstration to say that the rebels never expected to hold Yorktown, we have their own testimony to that effect. MAGRUDER rightly describes the impression Gen. McCLELLAN's conduct produced when he speaks of the "intense amusement and delight with which he at length saw that General begin to break ground before miserable earthworks defended by a feeble force of eight thousand men."

But if the rebel force was feeble at the outset and not in condition to offer any serious resistance to an even moderately vigorous attack, it was quite certain that it would not long be allowed to remain so. The enemy, finding unexpectedly that they could hold the Army of the Potomac in check until a secondary defensive line nearer Richmond could be prepared, would have shown an imbecility which they have never displayed, had they not done so. The high probability that they would both reason and act in this way seems to have been duly appreciated by the President, who communicated this impression to Gen. McCLELLAN in numerous dispatches, of which the following of April 6, is a sample: "You now have over one hundred thousand troops with you, independently of Gen. Wool's command. I think you had better break the enemy's line from Yorktown to Warwick River at once. They will probably use time as advantageously as you can." So again, three days afterward: "By delay, the enemy will relatively gain upon you; that is, he will gain faster by fortifications and reinforcements, than you can by reinforcements alone." Never was utterance more prophetic; for, says Gen. MAGRUDER, in his official report: "Through the energetic action of the (Confederate) Government, reinforcements began to pour in, and each hour the Army of the Peninsula grew stronger and stronger, until anxiety passed from my mind as to the result of an attack upon us." Moreover, at the same time that they were strengthening their front at Yorktown, they diligently employed the month of siege in perfecting the defences of Richmond, upon which they might, in the last resort, fall back, and which served them as a secure point d'appui in the battle before Richmond. With these facts, we submit it to the reader whether we are not justified in connecting by the closest logical bond of antecedent and consequent this fatal delay and all the disastrous results of the campaign on the Peninsula? If, as we conceive, this must be conceded, we will be in position to rate at their true value the series of excuses for his failure put forth by Gen. McCLELLAN and which we now proceed to examine.

II.

No sooner was Gen. McCLELLAN fairly landed on the Peninsula, than he began a series of the most extraordinary complaints and recriminations, opening up his batteries, not on the enemy, but on the Administration he had so grossly deceived. These complaints and recriminations he iterates and reiterates, with the evident purpose of explaining his slowness and inaction, by a reference to all conceivable causes except those which have reference to the General himself and to the ill-judged plan of campaign for which he is alone responsible. He complains that the naval authorities informed him after his arrival on the Peninsula that the James River was closed against his operations—as if that fact was not perfectly well known to him before commencing his movement; and he again complains by implication that the navy did not afford him the aid he had been led to expect, when he had no right to expect any aid from the navy, the Merrimac not having been "neutralized."

He complains that the want of McDOWELL's corps obliged him to forego his purpose of turning Yorktown by moving on the rear of Gloucester, when, at the same time, that movement was impracticable, as he himself reports, because the landing of troops on the left bank of the York River, below Gloucester, could not be covered by the navy. Thus we see that Gen. McCLELLAN was crippled, as he represents, because he could not turn Gloucester with McDOWELL's corps, when in fact he could not land troops below Gloucester, in order to turn that place, because he could receive no adequate support from the navy; while this fact itself is due to his own disregard of the warning of his four Generals, to wit, that the expedition to the Peninsula only received their approbation upon condition that the Merrimac should be "neutralized."

It ought to be stated in this connection that, in point of fact, Gen. McCLELLAN's plan did not contemplate the turning of Yorktown at Gloucester. After abandoning the idea of landing at Urbana, and the adoption of Fortress Monroe as the base of his movement up the Peninsula, his plan contemplated a direct advance upon Yorktown, his orders to Gen. HEINTZELMAN implying as much, and they were given before he left Washington, and before the order was issued for the detention of McDOWELL's corps.

This is further shown by the detailed statement made by Gen. McCLELLAN himself of his plan of campaign, in which he gives the opinion that he would be required to fight one great battle only, and that battle, he thought, would be fought in front of Richmond; so that, on the whole, it is plain that the detention of McDOWELL's corps had no sensible effect upon Gen. McCLELLAN's campaign, and all his complaints, with regard to that corps, are merely afterthoughts, repeatedly thrown into his report to turn the attention of the reader away from the true causes of the failure of his campaign.

It is quite remarkable that Gen. McCLELLAN, while throwing the blame of his failure upon the detention of McDOWELL, enumerates in connection with it causes of embarrassment wholly inconsistent with that complaint. Thus, on reaching the Peninsula, he found himself embarrassed for the want of transportation, looking to the advance of his army beyond Yorktown; and he has much to say on this subject, reciting, with approbation, a written opinion of Gen. KEYES that, for want of transportation, he would not be able to supply his army for a three days' march beyond Yorktown. Now it is plain that, if Gen. McCLELLAN's transportation was insufficient for that army in its then composition, much more would it have been insufficient for that army with McDOWELL's corps superadded; and it must be observed that, at the time of the detention of Gen. McDOWELL's corps in front of Washington, the entire supply train, which Gen. McCLELLAN had provided for his whole army, was sent forward to the Peninsula—not a single wagon of it having been detained with McDOWELL's command. As a consequence of this very fact, it was found afterward that, although Gen. McDOWELL's presence was important in the front of Washington, or in advance as far as Fredericksburgh, he could proceed no further, for the want of that very transportation which had been sent to the army on the Peninsula, and which Gen. McCLELLAN reports as insufficient for the wants of his army, diminished as it was by a portion of McDOWELL's corps.

He complains of the order by which Maj.-Gen. Wool, in command at Fortress Monroe, an old officer of the army, who claimed to be, by commission, senior to Gen. McCLELLAN, was relieved from being under his immediate orders, so far as his person was concerned. This complaint is totally without any just foundation, because, while Gen. Wool, out of deference to his age and rank, was relieved from coming personally under the orders of Gen. McCLELLAN, his troops and all of his munitions of war at Fortress Monroe were placed expressly at the disposal of Gen. McCLELLAN, Gen. Wool having been required to coöperate with him in all things, according to the wishes of Gen. McCLELLAN, and Gen. Wool signified not only his willingness, but his anxiety to afford him all the aid in his power, while Gen. McCLELLAN himself, by a telegram to the War Department, expressed himself entirely satisfied with the coöperation and assistance furnished to him by Gen. Wool. Notwithstanding this state of facts, Gen. McCLELLAN, in his report, complains that the order in question not only took from him his base of operations, but diminished his command by ten thousand men—a complaint which the President well answered by pointing out to him that "Gen. Wool's command was doing for him precisely what a like number of his own would have to do if that command was away." Now, it is worthy of observation here that out of the position of Gen. Wool, in command at Fort Monroe, came the only beneficial result of the entire campaign. For, as is well known, most of the rebel troops having been sent from Norfolk to resist the advance of Gen. McCLELLAN's army, an expedition was fitted out under the immediate auspices of the President and Secretary of War, who were on a visit to Fort Monroe, by which a force under the command of Gen. Wool took possession of the City of Norfolk—the enemy withdrawing from the city without making even a show of resistance. One immediate consequence of this was that the Commander of the rebel steamer, the Merrimac, which for weeks had held our whole navy in that quarter powerless to render aid to Gen. McCLELLAN, apparently under the influence of a panic, determined to destroy that formidable vessel, and accordingly that ship was blown up by her own Commander, and her hull sunk in sight of our troops at Norfolk, affording a magnificent spectacle as the finale to rebel power in and about that city.

Finally, he complains again and again of the smallness of his force, during a period at the beginning of which (when the rebels were weakest) he had twenty times their number, and at the end of which (when, through his own peculiar tactics, they were strongest) he had still more than twice their number. But though Gen. McCLELLAN is constantly whining about the weakness of his force, he strangely enough nowhere comes down to precise figures. In what purports to be a complete "Report" of the military transactions of this period, one would suppose he could hardly fail to give a detached statement of the strength of his army. Yet this capital point is entirely overlooked. Fortunately, we have at hand the means of supplying this unaccountable deficit. The "morning report" of the Army of the Potomac for April 30, 1862, vouched for by the Adjutant-General of the army, shows the following figures: Total aggregate, 180,378 men; aggregate present for duty, 112,392. Remember that this was while Gen. McCLELLAN was still besieging Yorktown. Afterward he received reinforcements, and from first to last he received a total of not less than 100,000 men! Almost the only definite statement of the strength of his army given by Gen. McCLELLAN is in a dispatch of April 7, in the following terms:

"When any reason commands it, I shall have about (85,000) eighty-five thousand men for duty, from which charge force must be taken for guards, scouts, etc."

But this is replied to by the President in a dispatch of the subsequent day:

"There is a curious mystery about the number of troops now with you. When I telegraphed you on the 6th, saying you had over a hundred thousand men with you, I had just obtained from the Secretary of War a statement taken, as he said, from your own returns, making 108,000 then with you and en route to you. You now say you will have but 85,000 when all en route to you shall have reached you. How was this discrepancy of 23,000 to be accounted for?"

We may add here that this "curious mystery" never was solved. It is wrapped up in the secrets of that extraordinary legerdemain which Gen. McCLELLAN always brings to the treatment of numbers.

The pertinacity with which Gen. McCLELLAN dwells upon these alleged causes of complaint, only serves to show the determined spirit in which he seeks to throw the blame of his failure upon others, and thus turn attention away from its true causes, which must be sought, first, in the inherent difficulties of the campaign, which should have prevented its having been undertaken altogether; and, secondly, in a characteristic element of the Commander of the Army of the Potomac, which the President appears to have appreciated by his repeated allusions, in his letters to Gen. McCLELLAN, to what he calls his over caution and his indisposition to act. Gen. McCLELLAN is in the condition of an ordinary man on whom had fallen a duty too heavy for him, and he now seeks to throw the responsibility of his failure upon others; but while for this course his painful position may be some apology, this can only be urged at the expense of his manliness.

III.

Was it because the rebels were ashamed of themselves at putting the grand Army of the Potomac to such unnecessary trouble, or was it because the position of McDOWELL's corps at Fredericksburgh became too serious a menace to Richmond, that they at length withdrew from Yorktown as secretly as they had withdrawn from Manassas? Gen. McCLELLAN had consumed many weeks, including the whole month of April, in preparing to breach the fort at Yorktown. It is impossible to say how many weeks more he would have gone on digging and hauling, and it is a matter of fact that he had just sent a request that the heavy siege guns in the fortifications for the defence of Washington should be taken out of their works and shipped to him, when, at length, the day after the withdrawal of the rebels, he "discovered" they had gone! Coming into possession of the deserted position, he immediately asked if he might inscribe "Yorktown" on his banners, and telegraphed a dispatch which he has forgotten to reproduce, to the effect that he would "push the enemy to the wall." We need hardly remark that this "wall" was never found; and we were left to exclaim with Pyramus:

"Thou wall! O, wall! O, sweet and lovely wall, Show me thy chink to blink through with mine eyne."

We shall in our next article follow Gen. McCLELLAN in his subsequent movements on the Peninsula; but before we dismiss the consideration of the siege of Yorktown, we must remark, in a word, that we find ourselves unable to accord to that siege the admiration which Gen. McCLELLAN challenges for it. We are requested to admire the thirty or forty miles of corduroy road constructed by his army, the miles of trenches and rifle-pits opened, and the huge batteries placed, none of which, by the way, was ever allowed to open its fire. But we could admire the corduroy road more, were it not, according to Gen. McCLELLAN's own statement, a mere piece of supererogation—the roads in that region being "passable at all seasons of the year." We could admire the colossal digging and delving more, could we shut out the ghastly vision of the thousands of lives lost by the epidemics of the region into which our army had been led and the useless servitude to which it had been condemned, or push aside the spectacle of those brave fellows digging at once a double ditch—a grave as well as a trench. We could admire more the profiles of his bastions and his batteries, did they not irresistibly present themselves to our imagination as huge monuments of the folly of a man who, seeking the Peninsula to execute a strategically offensive campaign, sat down, at the first show of resistance, to a feeble tactical defensive.

Flushing Gives Over $7,000 to Sanitary Commission.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Among the many towns doing nobly for our soldiers, Flushing, L. I., takes a high rank. Here is the record, so far, this year. When the Metropolitan Fair was proposed, Flushing immediately made up in cash $2,000. Next the ladies united with other Long Island towns and sent $1,700, in salable articles, hospital stores and money, to the Brooklyn Fair. Not weary in well-doing, they then went at once to work for the Metropolitan Fair, and got together a large amount of useful and ornamental articles and money, the churches, Sunday-schools, &c., all uniting together. It was thought, however, that a better sale, and a more general participation of the citizens could be secured by first superintending the articles for exhibition, and perhaps, for sale, at home. This was done on Tuesday, at the New-Town-hall, and, as the result, considerably over $3,000 were taken, which, with the unsold articles, will be sent to the Metropolitan Fair, April 4. This makes over $7,000 already contributed, while school exhibitions, and other contributions are still in progress. Besides this, the citizens of Flushing are largely merchants in New-York, where they are constituting from $100 to $500 each to the Dry Goods and other booths. Trade Finch, Whitestone, in the same town, is also at work independently. Has any other town of the same size done better, as as well?

ANOTHER NOTE OF FLUSHING.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

NEW-YORK, March 24, 1864.

We think Flushing has done grandly. We know all have done all they could, up to the last farthing and the last "stitch." The territory engaged in this enterprise has less than 5,000 inhabitants all told, and yet we have raised direct nearly $7,000; and the indirect contributions through dry goods and other dealers in this city, and direct cash yet to be made this month, will bring the sum to full $10,000.

A Flash Note Text.

WASHINGTON, N. H., Tuesday, March 22, 1864.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your views of extravagance, taxation, &c., have given me great satisfaction. I am a plain man, of but little note, and of no political importance whatever, but I go for the Government, "might and main," and have more fear for want of an energetic taxation than anything else.

It becomes every one to write, say and pay—do something or anything to help our armies or the treasury. Whatever may be used, let it put down this rebellion speedily.

For my money, I am with you. G. G. N.

COLORED TROOPS.

The Employment of Colored Troops—What they have Done and can Do—Experience in Maryland.

SEVENTH U. S. COLORED TROOPS, CAMP STANTON, BENEDICT, MD., Saturday, March 20, 1864.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Perhaps no one act of Mr. LINCOLN's administration has been so widely discussed, so vehemently condemned on the one hand, and so joyously hailed on the other, as that one which called into the field as soldiers the black men, both free and slave, of America. We may well believe that cautious as Mr. LINCOLN has been in every decided step he has taken, this one was not determined on without the most careful consideration, not unmingled with doubts as to the ultimate result. I think there were few even among those who had been most anxious for this very course, who did not have some fears in the mind of their hope, that, perhaps, after all, this attempt to make the black man assert his own right to manhood, at once, and without preparation, might be a failure. How those doubts were most triumphantly dispelled, it is not necessary to say here; Milliken's Bend, Port Hudson and Fort Wagner are too fresh in every memory.

Nearly a year has passed since the plan of employing colored troops was systematized. More than fifty thousand colored men are now under arms as soldiers in the service of the United States. In no one instance have they disappointed the expectation of those friendly to the cause—in every case have they thus far disappointed its enemies. Still there are those who honestly object to their employment in this capacity, and who do not admit the necessity or expediency of that employment. First, because they do not know what and how much these men are able to do; secondly, because the old prejudices are so deeply rooted, that they give way very slowly, and only before the most positive evidences, to new ideas. Others there are who are willing to give at once their whole sympathy and countenance to the movement, but wait for information on the subject, or who have already their full sympathies enlisted, and are glad to know all they can of its success. To these I wish to tell the story which follows; to those "who having eyes see not, having ears hear not, neither will they understand" anything either favorable to the negro as a free man, or to the Union as a free Republic, I have neither intention or desire to speak.

Let me briefly recount what has been done up to this time in the single State of Maryland, and what her black soldiers are. But a few of the many thousands of colored men now in the army have been enlisted here; they have as yet (this brigade at least) done no fighting work in the field, and yet their story is worth the telling—especially at this time, when the orders for their march have come, and any day may see them before the enemy.

But little more than six months ago Col. WM. BIRNEY was ordered to Baltimore to take charge of the recruiting of colored regiments in the service of the United States. In that time six regiments have been raised, equipped and fitted for the field. Three, the First, Second and Fourth, are already at work, and are each day speaking for themselves. Two, the Seventh and Ninth, are now under marching orders and will very shortly move to action. One, the Nineteenth, is ready waiting orders. One other, the Thirtieth, is now being recruited. This is the work which has been done in Maryland. The men who compose the rank and file of these regiments were slaves. They heard the word that set them free and its condition—its only one—to become soldiers. They had but to heap it. They knew freedom only as a possibility, a something infinitely to be desired and prayed for, hardly to be hoped. They knew of the rebellion and its objects, as it concerned themselves; they knew the name, and only the name of the thing they sought, and that the success of the rebellion would be the final death-blow to any attainment of their hope. They would have accepted freedom on any terms; the terms offered them were the very ones they themselves would have proposed—to fight tyranny.

The mothers who, with their simple and traditional knowledge of Him, had taught them to pray to God as their Father, had also taught them to pray to him as their Avenger—they had taught them, too, in a simple, ignorant way, truly, but none the less forcibly, to strike when the grand opportunity came. "Ah, Captain," said one of a large company of ragged recruits, "we done prayed for dis yer day all our lives; we can strike now for freedom; bress de Lord!" "Amen" was the solemn response of many a voice in the crowd. An aged negress shouted from the sidewalk in Baltimore as a portion of the Seventh Regiment passed down the street, "De Lord bless yer; yer is gwine to save my people!" One and all they knew the voice they had been taught to wait and listen for; and when it broke upon their ears—when the long and weary watch was over for them, and the day broke—it found them ready. It came to them in just the form they wanted it to come—freedom for them, and the chance to help win freedom for others. Thus they "leaped to manhood in one torrid hour."

There was no difficulty in filling the regiments; the difficulty was in providing fast enough for the flocking numbers. Those who, from physical disability, were rejected as not fit to bear arms, turned away in mute despair, or begged to be put to some work, however distantly connected with the great one their stronger brethren could perform. "Taint my fault dat my maum broke my leg wid a rail," said one; "I kin work like a horse yet." "I don't tink I'm quite forty, yet," said a white-haired patriarch, who had seen another rejected who had confessed to fifty years.

With such a spirit; with such a desire they came. What bounty did they need beyond the boon of freedom? What guarantee did they demand beyond the guarantee that they should be permitted to fight?

And so these regiments were filled. The camp had been removed from the two contracted limits assigned it in the City of Baltimore to Benedict, on the Patuxent River, in Charles County, the very heart of Slavery in Maryland. With extraordinary aptness the men learned their duties. With the utmost cheerfulness they worked day after day till their winter camp was completed, and then with alacrity turned to the real work of becoming soldiers. Of course there are among these soldiers many who learn slowly, or not at all—men with minds stupefied by the lives they have led or stupid from birth. Such men are found everywhere, and of every complexion. I speak of them as a whole when I say that their aptness for the drill and manual is remarkable, and would be remarkable in white troops. Very few regiments now in the service of the United States, even of the Regulars, can go through with the various manœuvres of a battalion drill with the accuracy and promptness of these two regiments, the Seventh and Ninth, who have been under instruction less than three months.

The morale of these soldiers is also remarkable. The general tone of the camp is of a very high order. There has been no single case of drunkenness, no case of insubordination, no case of serious misdemeanor. Punishment of any kind is rare, and, in every instance but one, has been of the lightest kind. The guard-houses are empty, or, at least, but very seldom occupied by a prisoner, and he confined only for the shortest period, and for an offence the result of carelessness and inattention, almost never for crime. What regiment three months in the service can say as much?

The officers of these regiments are young men who have entered the service because they believed in the cause. They are, of course, white men, and selected men. The Government has wisely concluded that none but white men shall be commissioned, and none save those who have passed the ordeal of the Examining Board, under Gen. CASEY, in Washington. This course secures two things. First, that the officers of the black troops shall be competent men, fitted for the positions they hold; secondly, that they shall be men who believe in the cause they are fighting for, and have faith in the peculiar material they are obliged to handle. Of these officers it is, of course, impossible for me to speak without appearing to be invidious. It is enough to know now, as we are starting to the field, that they are, so far as I know, with hardly an exception, men fully equal to the dignity and responsibility of their calling—men full of earnestness, full of courage; nearly all of them have proved it in the ranks on the field of battle; and full, too, of that great faith in the future and in themselves without which no army can hope for victory.

It must be remembered by those who consider the subject of the enlistment of slaves, that that enlistment is accomplishing results more than appears upon the face; that great as the work is, the immediate work which they are especially called to assist in performing—a work in which the whole might and heart of the nation is enlisted—the work of the enlisted slave is greater and more extensive in its results. For this reason, that for all time to come it decides the destinies of a whole race, inaugurating with a certainty of practical and immediate effect the system which shall place upon the broad platform of a free and recognized humanity a whole race to whom it has been heretofore practically denied. It does more than this even. It is to be one great means of proving to the world that practical freedom and universal freedom is possible; that the declaration of the original thirteen colonies, solemnly adopted and solemnly applauded through all these years, is no longer to be a living lie but a great and governing truth. It is to give an impetus to the cause of freedom all over the world. By making free and keeping free those who have been considered the lowest class of our fellow-men, it shall prove the right of those of a higher grade, now suffering from liberty restricted and enchained, to a higher, broader, more liberal and more enduring freedom.

The movement becomes in this light the grandest step forward for humanity at large ever taken by any people. It was reserved for the American people to take it. It was reserved for them after bearing the foul stigma of Slavery for years upon a free banner, to do this great good not to themselves only, but to all the world, thus to wipe away that stigma, and at the same time to strike the deadliest and most destructive blow to Tyranny everywhere. It needed that we should be brought very low—should suffer great pain—should bleed deep and from every pore before we could summon courage to take the step—but we have taken it—God grant we courage as a nation to continue onward to the great end.

And so these two regiments start out upon this mission. What they can do remains for the future to tell; at least, they have shown themselves to be filled with the true order, the great spirit that makes soldiers and which teaches them the true courage. No man who has seen them can doubt that they will prove efficient. Place the question of their employment in what light you will, whether of expediency or philanthropy, I believe that no one who understands them and their efficiency, can hesitate to approve, that is to say, if he truly loves his country and desires the highest good to all mankind. If any man, with or without that knowledge, does not approve, I do not know that it will make any great difference in the end. The work has been begun, and revolutions, whether moral or physical, never go backward. W.

[We may add that both the Seventh and Ninth Regiments of United States Colored Troops mentioned above, have been shipped from Maryland, and have arrived safely at Hilton Head, in the Department of the South.]—ED. TIMES.

LAW REPORTS.

Three Hundred Dollar Verdict in the Edmondson Case Against the Express for Libel.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Isaac W. Edmondson vs. James Brooks and Erastus Brooks.—This was an action for libel against defendants, proprietors of the New-York Express. The case was tried yesterday for the second time, and has already been reported in the Times. The evidence taken on the former trial was read to the jury, and Mr. James Brooks, defendant, in person, summed up for the defence. The evidence vindicated the character of the plaintiff complete, and the jury rendered a verdict in his favor for $300 and costs.

A. Sandford for plaintiff; C. Lawton for defendants.

SUPERIOR COURT.

Before Judge Mitchell and a Jury.

Christian Brand vs. Hiram Fuchs and Robert Gunson.—This action was brought to recover a cargo of Miller & Co.'s Spring vein red ash coal, or its value, which plaintiff claimed amounted to $2,000. The defendants set up that the coal was Hunter & Galgay's. Witnesses were examined for the plaintiff, including the plaintiff himself, by which it appears that Brand contracted with Fuchs in March, 1863, to purchase the coal at $6 per ton, and Fuchs agreed to deliver the coal within two weeks. The contract was not in writing. Witnesses were subpoenaed by Brand to be on the wharf, which were stationed on the afternoon of the 20th of May last; the defendant demanded an advance of 50 cents per ton, and the plaintiff refused to pay it. When the coal arrived, which was on May 5, 1863, Brand tendered Gunson $400 as freight, and demanded the coal; he refused to take the money and refuse to deliver the coal, as defendant Fuchs had so directed him; on the day following Brand tendered to Fuchs the money for the coal at $6 per ton, and demanded the coal; Fuchs refused to receive it, and ordered Brand out of his office. It was further proven that the quality of coal in question was worth $6 when the contract was made, and it was worth $6 50 when the coal arrived. The bill of lading was read in evidence. This closed the plaintiff's case, and Mr. Jones moved for a non-suit, on the ground that the contract was void because it was not in writing, and no part of the coal delivered to the plaintiff. Mr. Beasley, for plaintiff, insisted that the action was well brought; that the plaintiff obtained title under the bill of lading; that the delivery of the bill of lading was in lieu a delivery of the coal mentioned in it, and that the action was not brought on the contract, and that the contract should not be considered in the case. Counsel for defendant cited and commented on the cases of Elwood vs. Smith, 8 Howard, 589; Broom maxim, Bursam, 16 Th., 360; and the case of Fleshing vs. Wilhams, reported in 5th Selden, 502, in which case the Court of Appeals held that a bill of lading is like any other contract in writing, and cannot be contradicted nor altered by parol. The court granted the motion, and the plaintiff excepted. The exceptions were ordered to be heard, in the first instance, at the General Term.

Alex. S. Heaven, R. H. Waite and Mr. Kleasm for plaintiff; Mr. Lyon and Samuel Jones for defendant.

Assault and Battery—Inadmissible Provocation.

MARINE COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Judge Alker.

Philip Gaffney vs. Thomas Keenan.—This was an action to recover 1000 damages for an alleged willful assault and battery. The plaintiff charges that on the 20th of February last he accompanied a man deputized to serve a summons on defendant, to a store where he was; that when there defendant committed the assault.

The evidence showed that violent and abusive language to defendant calling him a thief and a robber, had striking him the first blow. Verdict for defendant.

Mr. Slocum for plaintiff; Philip W. Joyner and Charles W. Sugg for defendant.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

—The approaching Spring New-York Trade Sale of Books, Stereotype Plates, Stationery, &c., commences on March 30, and is an event of general interest to the book trade. Though some deem it, in principle, opposed to the system of trade sales, on the ground that it destroys uniformity in prices, &c., the convenience of them is so great, both to buyers and sellers, that there is little doubt they are as firmly rooted as any other part of the trade machinery, whereby the circulation of books through this vast country is effected. Mr. Cooley's present catalogue indeed marks the adhesion to the plan of the eminent firm of Messrs. Harper, whose names, after five or six years absence, again figure in his pages. This catalogue forms a portly volume of nearly four hundred pages, and embraces probably two hundred thousand dollars' worth of books, all of which will be disposed of by the hammer of the ubiquitous auctioneer. Some well-known and formerly constant buyers of these sales have disappeared since the commencement of the Southern troubles, but the loss has been more than made up by the growing demands of the great West, including California and Canada, which latter country is now generally represented by many considerable purchasers, and as a business point of view is fairly "bonzed" and tributary to the Empire City of New-York. Some large lots of stereotype plates, including the stock of two Philadelphia houses (Willis P. Hazard and Lindsay & Blakiston,) who are making changes in their business, are in the present catalogue, and come more purely under the head of speculative property than books—the current value of which is generally understood to within a small fraction by both buyer and seller. The sale continues for over a week, and the steady attendance it commands, though a tedious and even exhaustive process to an outsider, shows how important it is considered by those for whose benefit it is specially appointed.

—Discarding all novelty of outward style Charles Dickens' new work to appear on May 1, will be published in Twenty Monthly Parts, at one shilling each, uniform with the original editions of "Pickwick," "Nickleby," &c. The only change is in the artist. Mr. Hablot K. Browne, ("Phiz,") whose powers are rather failing with age, gives place as illustrator of the new work, to Frank Stone, a son of the late well known painter, Marcus Stone, and a protégé of Mr. Dickens, who has shown a remarkable ability in the few specimens of his artistic skill that have come before the public. The work will be given to the American reading world, as one of the attractions of Harper's Monthly Magazine. In London, Mr. Dickens continues with his original publishers, Messrs. Chapman & Hall, who, about thirty years since, had the discernment to engage in the venture of the "Pickwick Papers," after they had been refused by a majority of the trade.

—The Life of Gen. Wolfe, the hero of Quebec, after many promises is, at last brought out, the work of a new author, R. Wagoon, apparently unknown to fame. For some years it was announced that Southey had undertaken the subject, for which very interesting materials exist in the shape of Wolfe's family correspondence; but, like many of the literary projects of the laureate, its progress was finally stopped by his fatal illness. The well-known anecdote, that Wolfe, on the night before the storming of the heights of Abraham, was found reading Gray's "Elegy," and declared that he would rather have the glory of being its author than that which success in the coming attack would secure to him, shows that Wolfe was of a different mental texture from most of the Georgian Generals, like Bannockburn and others, who were formed on the model of the Duke of Cumberland, and displied literature accordingly.

—The name of Dr. Bushnell is one that will live in the memories of all who were familiar, personally with the rabbi qualities that caused him to rank so high in the moral scale, and we are glad to state that his demise as an eloquent and earnest divine will be perpetuated to posterity by the publication of his works, now being produced in the first style of typographical elegance by Messrs. Sheldon & Co. They will form two volumes, crown octavo, and contain the ripest results of his refined taste and critical scholarship, on the most important points of theological investigation. In Dr. Bushnell's lifetime little better occasional publications appeared under his name, but the works now brought out are those which revision occupied him from time to time, until they were brought into a state that satisfied the severe revisitations of his own highly cultivated taste, surpassed as it was in the widest range of belles lettres studies. Messrs. Sheldon & Co. have also in press a fine library edition of Neander's History of the Planting and Training of the Christian Church, the work by which its learned author is perhaps best known, as its portable size secures for it a circulation that more voluminous "church histories" can never attain. It is newly translated by Rev. H. B. Robinson, D. D., of the Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y. It will form a handsome octave volume of 500 pages. Meyer, Smallman's world-renowned edition of "Dickens' Works" is now drawing to a conclusion; only four more volumes remain to be published to complete the forty-eight which will complete his entire writings. What can be said of few large undertakings of his been carried on and finished with the same attention to the minutia of detail that characterized its commencement and stamped it at once as the edition with which none indeed in the author's native country could compete, in all that constitutes a fine book, such as connoisseurs love to contemplate. Messrs. Sheldon have lately received a gratifying testimony to the excellence of their edition of Milman's History of Latin Christianity, from the Riverside Press. When the volumes were sent to Dean Milman, he acknowledged their receipt in a letter, saying, "I regard them as unsurpassed in typography and beauty of arrangement by any thing in our own country. This work is but one of the elegant series of standard books, including the writings of Macaulay, Disraeli, Hallam and others, all produced in the same style of typography from the same press of which Messrs. Sheldon are the publishers.

—In the reprints of Old English Literature, growing out of the prevailing taste for its study, an undue prominence perhaps has been given to the poetical and dramatic element, leaving out of view, comparatively, the prose literature of the people, from whence the most correct view of their tastes, habits and modes of thought is obtained. As a step in this direction, Mr. Carew Hazlitt has commenced a republication of "Old English Jest Books." The first volume, just issued, comprises "A Hundred Merry Tales," the very book alluded to by Beatrice in "Much Ado About Nothing," and preserved to our times by a single copy only, that was discovered within a few years, the leaves pasted together as boards for the binding of a book. It would be difficult to estimate the value of such a unique treasure at the present day; but Mr. Hazlitt's reprint has equal advantage with the original for literary uses, and is well edited, with introduction, notes, &c. The other work comprised in the volume is "Merry Tales and Quicke Answeres," from the edition of 1567, of which only two copies are extant, so complete has been the destruction, by shear wear and tear, of this class of works. The general title of the volume is Shakspearean Jest Books: Reports of the early and very rare Jest Books, supposed to have been read by Shakspeare, as independently of their own curiosity they seem to illustrate the writings of the great dramatist, who all delight to honor.

—The Tenth Volume of Mr. Thomas Carlyle's History of Frederick the Great has just appeared in London. It contains the events of twelve years and a half (1744-1757,) and is consequently more rapid in its narrative than Volume III, which was wholly taken up with the history of the first four years of Frederick's reign. It is impossible even yet to guess the time that the work will eventually attain, or exactly thirty years of Frederick's life yet remain to traverse, and Mr. Carlyle's method of treatment of his subjects is so exhaustive, that he can compress or extend them, purely at pleasure. The new volume divides itself into three portions, two warlike, and one peaceful interspersed between them—The Second Silesian War, (1744-45); Ten Years of Peace, (1745-55;) The Seven Years' War, First Campaign, (1756-57.) The military history is treated continuously in the form of annals as in the former volumes; but in the portion more attractive to the general reader—the History of the Peace—events are grouped together with Mr. Carlyle's usual skill, so as to form a complete picture of the life of Frederick during that period, and the persons and events that influenced his action as a sovereign and as a man. The literary circle with which he surrounded himself, while endeavoring to create at Berlin an intellectual life similar to that of the French capital, receives much attention, especially its leading member, Voltaire, whose character has great attractive for Carlyle, and in his mingled traits of genius and meanness, offers a fine subject for the graphic skill that stamps it a few burning words the distinctive peculiarities of its victim. The volume will shortly be published by Messrs. Harper, who are the American reprinters of the work.

The April Magazines.

—Harper's New Monthly Magazine, among its noticeable features, presents us with the first portion of Mr. Thackeray's unfinished story, "Denis Duval," the occupation of his latest hours, that, in the opinion of Dickens, is "in respect of earnestness of feeling, far-seeing purpose, character, incident and a certain living picturesqueness, blending the whole, much the best of his works." An interesting analysis of Capt. Speke's discovery of the Nile source, with some of the original illustrations, prepares readers for the entire work about to be published by Messrs. Harper. "The Torture of the Innocents," a paper on the treatment of infants, pointing out how the usual mistakes on that all-important subject may be avoided, does credit to the womanly feeling of the authoress, Mrs. M. L. Snow. Dr. Osgood's article on "The Golden Wedding" is drawn from an incident in real life that will be immediately recognized, and is improved to the best uses. Mr. Lossing's "War Scenes of 1812," now carry him into the Indian Territory, and the present number is dedicated to the early campaigns and border warfare of Gen. Andrew Jackson against the Creeks. Two articles—Mr. John Bray's "My Escape from Richmond," and Major Bolles's narrative of an unsuccessful attempt of Confederates to "Escape from Fort Warren"—illustrate different phases of the present contest. Mr. Taylor's "Small House at Allington" draws to a conclusion, that to all appearance must be unsatisfactory to those who love to see every one married and comfortably settled in the last chapter of a novel, as there seems small chance of Lily's love ever running smoothly. The usual variety of gallies and gravities concludes the number.

—The Atlantic Monthly (Boston, Ticknor & Fields) opens with "Fighting Facts for Foples," an industrious compilation, by C. C. Hazewell, of historical facts tending to prove the incorrectness of the current idea, that only young men possess the energy and activity necessary for a first-rate General. Kutusoff, Radetzky and Blucher, are only a few of the names by whom he establishes his position. "The First Visit to Washington," is an interesting sketch of incidents in the early life of Secretary Chase. "Fouché the Magnificent," recounts the career and lamentable fall of the former Superintendent of Finance, under Louis XIV., who closed a life of unexampled power, luxury and magnificence, by twenty years' confinement in an obscure dungeon. "Pictor Ignotus," by Gail Hamilton, is a review that treats of, but is far from exhausting, the genius of the extraordinary artist, William Blake, whose memory has been revived among men by the late "Memoir," by Mr. Gilchrist. Illness has unfortunately prevented for the present the appearance of the new romance by Mr. Hawthorne, announced for the current volume of the Atlantic, nor in its absence is fiction a prominent characteristic of the magazine, the only tale in this number, being "The Schoolmaster's Story," by A. M. Diaz. The poetry is small in quantity, but choicely good. "The Wreck of Rivermouth," by Whittier, and "The Black Preacher," by J. R. Lowell, one a New-England, the other a Breton, legend. "Among the Mormons," by Fitz Hugh Ludlow, gives us a far more favorable view of Brigham Young than what is usually accepted for truth, and brings into notice the extraordinary natural features of the Mormon Land.

—The United States Service Magazine, (New-York, C. B. Richardson,) No. 3, appears in its customary superior style of typography, setting an example, in this respect, to its elder brethren. Its contents are nearly equally divided between subjects that relate to the general military science and papers appertaining to the course and events of the war of the rebellion. "Three Months around Charleston Bar," by Robert Stewart Davis, contains a graphic account of the assault on Fort Wagner, where fell Col. Shaw. "Volunteering and Conscription" urges powerfully the paramount necessity of a regular system of supply for our armies, in place of the spasmodic measures hitherto relied on. "Horsemanship and the Methods of Training the Horse to Obey his Rider," affords valuable aids for the improvement of our cavalry service. "Russia and America," by Charles Godfrey Leland, shows the prevalence and growth of the good understanding existing between the two countries. The official intelligence is of course full and accurate, and of great permanent value.

—The Continental Monthly (New-York, John F. Trow) offers a varied bill of fare in its table of contents: A Presbyterian clergyman reviews Sir Charles Lyell on the antiquity of man, and is not afraid of taking the liberal and progressive side of the question; "Benedict of Nursia and the Order of the Benedictines" is by Dr. Philip Schaff, whose name is a sufficient guarantee for profound learning and thorough acquaintance with every subject of ecclesiastical antiquity. One of the most suggestive papers is "The Development of American Architecture," by A. W. Cazenove. It speaks more hopefully of the prospect than we should be inclined to do, in face of the precious opportunities daily wasted, and we fear it will be some time before circumstances can bring about a general prevalence of æsthetic feeling among our people before such a development can be looked for. "English and American Taxation," by Robert Hunt, and Hon. Robert J. Walker's letter on "Jefferson Davis and Repudiation of Arkansas Bonds," will command the attention of political readers.

—The republication of the English Reviews and Blackwood's Magazine (New-York: Leonard Scott & Co.) proceeds steadily, and furnishes an amount of reading matter of the first-class for stability, not to be procured for a like sum of money in any other shape. The Edinburgh Review, No. 243, just issued, contains an excellent article on "The Treatment of Jewish History and the Mosaic Narrative," by Dean Milman and Dean Stanley, and the best critical appreciation yet made of Fowler's "History of Queen Elizabeth." The Quarterly Review, No. 229, is equally rich in matter, discussing "Guns and Pistols," the rival systems of naval attack and defence; "The Discovery of the Nile," "Forsyth's Life of Cicero," &c.

The Newly-Opened Mineral Territory—Idaho.

From the Kansas City Journal, March 15.

We are enabled this morning to lay before our readers direct and reliable news from the Idaho gold mines. Dr. E. D. Rogers, an old and well-known citizen of this city, went to Bannock last year with a stock of goods, and has just returned. We have had a conversation with him, and gather the following interesting particulars:

First, as to the gold: It is there, and in large quantities. The main mining is as yet gulch and sluice mining, although there are two quartz mills, which are paying well. The gold itself is of a very pure quality—worth $18 per ounce. It is found in the form of nuggets as well as in that of dust. The Doctor showed us a couple of beautiful nuggets, which Mr. Stevens, of the Mechanics' Bank, weighed in our presence—the one worth $16 and the other $8. The Doctor tells us that he has himself seen nuggets worth $176, while those worth from $50 to $100 are quite common. He says that last year everybody in the mines did well. He brings news from a couple of old residents of Kansas City, viz: Jim Strange and Mr. Underwood. They both spent a couple of years in Montana, without making anything, but are now doing well in Idaho. Vivian is at Blinking Water Gulch, and employs twenty men running sluices. He takes out, on an average, $1,200 per day. Underwood is also doing well. A colored man, named Harrison, formerly of this place, has laid up over a thousand dollars, earned by cooking for a mess. Laborers are plenty at $6 per day. There is plenty of water for sowing sluices. The mining is much like that in California in early days.

Idaho, as our readers are aware, is the name of a very large Territory. The two principle mining towns are Bannock and Virginia City—about sixty-five miles apart—Bannock being the more easterly, and situated on the stream called Beaver Creek. There are from eight hundred to one thousand people at Bannock and about five thousand in the vicinity of Virginia City.

The mines are on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains. Stages run from Bannock to Salt Lake, fare sixty dollars. The people of Idaho have been cleaning out the scoundrels usually attached to such places. Over twenty have been hung, among them the Sheriff and Deputy-Sheriff of Virginia City. One of the fellows was named Galligher, and formerly from this place.

The Doctor says the trip can be made from here to Bannock, with a mule train, in about 70 days—with oxen, in from 90 to 100 days. Those going should procure their tools before starting, as tools are very high there—shovels $12, &c. Provisions to last six months should be taken. He is about to return himself. Coming as these statements do from a perfectly reliable and well-known man, we are glad to place them before our readers.

New-York Extravagance—Sharp Criticism by a Yankee Lady.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your recent article upon extravagance interested us in the country exceedingly, expressing our sentiments exactly. Now, we live in the land of steady habits, where, during this war, the price of cotton has so appalled us, that we actually mend up, and "top over" articles of wearing apparel in a way that I suppose would be perfectly shocking to the taste of your city ladies. As to silk dresses we turn our old ones four times, and then have them dyed, and we use no coffee at all, or only water flavored with the foreign berry, though under proper circumstances, we could enjoy a genuine cup of Mocha or old Government Java, as well as anybody. Taking the papers up where I live, a luxury we still indulge in, we have read such terrible accounts of the wild extravagance of New-York that, a short time ago, I thought it my duty to take a trip to your modern Babylon, and see what you really were up to. Supposing that one of Maretzek's matinées, where "Faust" was performed would be as good a place as I could find to make observations, I went to the Academy of Music for that purpose, and oh! shades of our Revolutionary grandfathers and grandmothers! what did I there behold! The richest silks with stuff enough trailing in the skirt to make an ordinary sized woman's whole dress—sensibly. French flowers and feathers of fabulous prices, and camels-hair shawls, and diamonds enough to pay off all our national debt, and part of England's (to speak within bounds, as I always do.) Oh, what seas of heads were there, bobbing and bowing, frizzled and puffed, so heavy without, so empty within! What quantities of hands from which the expensive gloves had been removed to show the jeweled rings! What scores of extravagant opera-glasses, needing so much adjusting by delicate fingers, which would have been all unseen in their owners' laps! Ah, me! with what a sniff would these same opera-glasses have been leveled at our hard-handed, unjeweled, earnest, patient, self-denying, glorious old Revolutionary grandmothers, had they suddenly made their appearance there!

Going in almost an hour before the opera commenced, I found the whole building crowded, and I was obliged to stand, first on one foot, and then on the other, in one of the aisles. On one side of me sat a venerable woman whose hair (the frosts of seventy Winters had not blanched, (cause why? hair-dye!) and upon her long skinny fingers glittered a number of costly diamonds, upon which she occasionally cast complacent glances as she turned them round and round. Taking off my own glove immediately after this revolting sight, I turned inside my hand a small modest stone of this sort, which was put on my finger some years ago, on an interesting occasion when I hadn't said no. On the other side of me was comfortably seated a young man who didn't smell of gunpowder—oh, no!—Lubin's perfumery, of which he was redolent, was strong enough for him. He closed his eyes and wagged his head beautifully to the march in "Faust," and I laughed a little laugh all to myself, thinking if he was to hear another kind of a march, right up to the enemies' batteries, how quick his fine broadcloth coat-tails would stand straight out in the same direction. You will be glad to know that this nice, sweet, fine young man, after I had stood two mortal hours, let me have his chair arm! Well, I came back to the country, and as I sit busily plying my needle and thread, mending some more dilapidated shirts than Hood so pathetically sung of, I sigh over your extravagant City and the "straightening out" you have got to take before this cruel war is over.

A YANKEE LADY.

The Camden and Amboy Railroad.

Editor of the New-York Times:

In connection with your remarks in Saturday's issue in regard to the recent accident on this road, permit me to add some experience of my own on this delectable route to Philadelphia.

I left New-York in the 10 A. M. train of Monday, 18th January, to attend an annual meeting of a corporation in Philadelphia, at 3 P. M., same day, being due at 1:50. While running at 20 or 25 miles per hour, our entire train was thrown from the track a few miles east of Trenton. Fortunately, all the couplings held, and no one was seriously injured. Our train had to be replaced from Bordentown; one detention succeeded another, and we reached Philadelphia at 20 minutes past 10 at night, 8 hours and 20 minutes from route about a bit in and or a drop of water to drink, except what the cars could not be had. Think of mothers and children 12 to 14 hours without food or water.

While relating my experience in a counting room on the following Wednesday, a very indignant gentleman called in to relate his, which was that the train which left the evening before at 4 P. M., and due at Philadelphia at 8, ran off the track also between Princeton and Trenton, but on the old track, and the train reached Philadelphia at 2 A. M. the next morning.

So far as I have seen neither of these accidents have ever been noticed even by either the New-York or Philadelphia press.

Why is this?

How long must the traveling public of the two largest cities of this Continent be compelled to submit to such a managed corporation, why does Congress hesitate to declare the D. and R. Bay R. Co. a post route, and thus create a competition, that will impart unto this corporation some little energy.

March 19. S. M.

Miscellaneous.

—Parson Brownlow, in his Knoxville Whig and Rebel Vindicator, says of the Tennessee aristocracy: "Through the mercy of God, the firmness of Mr. Lincoln and the madness of the Southern Confederacy, we are all about to find a common level, where we can at least boast that the Lord is the maker of us all. He has not heretofore seen the maker of us all, but the times are changing! It will require lamps and gaslights in the daytime to find the aristocracy of this town."

—A letter from Chattanooga says that place has become a foul-smelling, filthy entrepot for the shipping of supplies to the front. "Not a cubic inch of pure air is inhaled. The stench of dead mules and horses is sickening, while the sight of the putrid animals disgusts everybody. Disease is spreading rapidly, and it is having its effect upon the sick in hospital, as shown by the large increase of deaths last month, over that of the previous one."

—Indiana had raised on the 31st of January an aggregate of 7,330 men more than required, and in every district there is an excess of from 500 to 800 men. The veteran credits and enlistments since that time have raised her surplus to about 25,000, or enough to discharge her quota under a new call for 300,000. She will take escape a draft under the new call for 200,000.

—The Presbyterian Church at Elmira, N. Y., in which the "Southern Tier" Sanitary was progressing, met fire on March 18, and was consumed, with all its contents. The entire loss is unknown, but the church building was insured for $12,000.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

Fire and Explosion—One Man Killed—Loss $12,000.—An explosion in the Kerosene Oil Refinery of the New-York Coal Oil Company, whose office is at No. 194 Maiden-lane, occurred about half past 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, at Hunter's Point, L. I. One of the night watchmen named James Noonan entered the room where the oil is refined, with a lighted lamp, when instantly an explosion occurred, and the building was set on fire. Noonan was so covered with a falling wall that he could not extricate himself, and standing nearly upright, he burned to death before those who, from the firemen of the flames, were powerless to aid or remove him. His age was 27 years, and he leaves a wife and four children. The damage to the establishment, including the loss of refined oil, machinery, buildings, etc., will reach fully $12,000. The Chemical Works adjoining, of Messrs. Langmar & Cox, were set on fire and consumed. Their loss will reach $4,000, mostly prepared chemicals.

The Fratricide Shooting Affair.—Mrs. Varnerin, who was shot on Tuesday last, was pronounced to be better yesterday by her physician, who now thinks that she will eventually recover from the effects of the wound.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Large Fire in Washington and Fulton-streets. A Warehouse Destroyed, and Several Stores Badly Damaged.

Some time a little before yesterday afternoon a fire broke out on the second floor of the extensive wooden and willow warehouse of Messrs. Earle & Lane, situated at No. 189 Washington-street, near Fulton. The flames were first seen issuing from the packing-room, on the second floor. On account of the highly combustible nature of the goods, the fire spread with rapidity, and in a short time the entire building was enveloped. The building, which was a four-story brick one, was entirely destroyed, together with a large portion of the contents.

The Messrs. Earle & Lane estimated that stock at $25,000. They are insured for $17,000 in the Howard, Park, Globe, and Kings' County Insurance Companies. The building was owned by Mr. Garry. It was valued at $7,000, and is fully insured in City companies.

The store, No. 187 Washington-street, occupied by Messrs Lorimer & Milnes as a fruit establishment, was very largely damaged by fire and water. Their stock was valued at $5,000; insured in the Hope Insurance Company, $3,000; City, $3,000; Greenfield, $5,000; Merchants', $4,000; National, $3,000; Irving, $5,000; Firemen's Fund, $5,000; Firemen's, $7,000. The building, which is owned by the Stagg estate, was injured to the amount of over $1,000.

No. 237 Fulton-street, occupied by Wm. Hodges as a butter and cheese warehouse, was damaged to the extent of $3,000. Fully insured.

Nos. 101 Washington-street and 238 Fulton-street (the corner building) is occupied by Messrs. J. H. Cate & Co., wholesale grocers. Their stock is considerably damaged by water, probably $1,500. They are insured for $8,000 in the Merchants' Insurance Company.

No. 236 Fulton-street, a butter and cheese warehouse, occupied by C. H. Taylor. His damage by water and smoke is about $1,000; insured in the Hamilton, Stuyvesant, and Globe Insurance Companies.

No. 232 Fulton-street, occupied as a fruit store by P. A. Keller & Co., was damaged on stock $2,000; insured in the National Insurance Company.

Messrs. Sherrerd & Kane, dealers in eggs, occupy the basement of the last-named building. Their loss is about $1,000. Insured in the Park Insurance Company.

R. L. Lindley & Co., wholesale grocers, at No. 230 Fulton, were damaged on their stock to the extent of $500. They are fully insured.

Capt. Gazzo, of the Third Precinct, and Capt. Helms, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, each with a platoon of men, were promptly on the spot, and were active in saving property and in aiding the firemen to extinguish the flames.

The Alleged Homicide of a Canal-boat Captain.

An inquest was held yesterday by Coroner Naumann, at the Second Precinct Station-house, on the body of George W. Allen, late Captain and owner of the canal-boat Pride of the West. On Thursday afternoon deceased was engaged in loading his boat with coal, from the ship John H. Ramsen, lying at Pier No. 20, East River. While the Captain was in the hold of his boat, engaged in shoveling away coal, he was struck on the head with a large piece of coal, injuring him so badly that he died soon after.

Oliver Allen, residing in Rochester, this State, testified that deceased was his father; witness was on the deck of the canal-boat Pride of the West at the time of the occurrence on Thursday afternoon; he saw James Foley throw slums of coal into the hold where his father was; it struck the shute which was used for sliding down the coal, and then bounded down the hold; he (witness) was about ten feet from the hold at the time.

Martin L. Allen, another son of deceased, testified, I was at work with father in the canal-boat Pride of the West; we were engaged in shoveling away coal that was being dumped into the boat; I was working just behind him; the men in the ship along side of our boat abused deceased the day before about getting lines out over our boat; James Foley was one of the men on the ship; the men on the ship abused him in the same way on Thursday morning; after dinner yesterday they commenced to get the shute ready to dump; they began to dump before deceased was ready, and a bucket-full of coal went over him, hurting him some on the shoulder; I saw James Foley, one of the prisoners, pick up a lump of coal and throw it; he was engaged with another man in unsetting the bucket of coal into the shute; I saw him take the piece of coal (now shown) and throw it with both hands at deceased's head, it hit him on the head, and he fell immediately; Foley had abused deceased very much before that day; he had also threatened to throw me overboard; a few minutes before he threw the coal he said to deceased, "Mind, old man, I'll put you to a corpse before night;" when he threw the coal he waited to see if it struck deceased; deceased was carried immediately for the hospital, and died while on the way thither.

The jury rendered a verdict that "deceased came to his death from a fracture of the skull from a piece of coal being thrown on his head by James Foley." The latter is 40 years of age, a laborer, and resided at No. 272 Water-street. The Coroner committed him to the Tombs. Deceased was about 47 years of age, and resided in Rochester, New-York. His wife and two sons were present at the inquest.

Young Men's Union Central Committee.

At a meeting of the Young Men's Union Central Committee, held at Headquarters, corner of Twenty-third-street and Broadway, on Thursday evening, March 17, 1864, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The time has arrived when every patriotic and loyal heart should give its attention to the further destinies of the country in the choice of its Chief Magistrate, the agitation which is now proceeding by spontaneous movements of the people in the East as well as in the West, and

Whereas, The gratitude of the people is eminently due to the present just and upright Executive in the hour of the nation's trial, therefore

Resolved, That the young men of this Metropolis, represented in the Central Committee of the Union Leagues of the City and County of New-York, declare that the national existence and its continued prosperity, notwithstanding a terrible but causeless rebellion, demand the reelection of Abraham Lincoln.

Resolved, That while the thoughts and actions of the people have already strongly manifested the growing feeling, while the old and young at home, and the braves in the field attest to the public recognition of his unquestionable integrity and manifest patriotism, while the Granite Hills have spoken in thunder tones "The Union shall and must be preserved" and the stability of the American Government is vindicated, we hail him as their choice.

Resolved, That the reelection of Abraham Lincoln will forever thwart the hope of traitors at home and demonstrate to tyrants abroad that the young men of Republican institutions are ever vigilant, just and brave, the people never yielding in devotion until the banner of the Republic shall float over the whole land.

Flowers! Bring Flowers!

The Floral Committee of the Metropolitan Fair appeal to the public through the columns of the Times, hoping thus to gain the attention of some whom their circulars have not reached.

In addition to fresh flowers, seeds, roots, &c., of which, it is hoped, all who possess will contribute liberally, many other things are immediately needed.

Large quantities of green moss and evergreen wreaths, boughs of holly paper and artificial flowers are needed for the decoration of the building.

A particular appeal is made for the loan of large numbers of plants in pots—the pots to be marked in white paint with the owners' names. These plants will be under the charge of a careful gardener during the Fair.

The articles intended for the Fair should be sent as soon as possible to the receiving rooms at the Palace Garden, Fourteenth-street, New-York.

Any of the principal express companies will undertake the delivery free of charge.

Persons living at a distance in the country may gather the mosses and greens which freely grow on every hillside, even in wintry weather.

Thus they can add beauty and freshness to our crowded rooms, and so those gifts of Heaven, cure without money, and price, may be as a golden harvest for the sick and wounded soldiers.

Committee of Conference.—Mr. August Belmont, Mr. George C. Gray, Mr. Edward Potter, Mr. Lydig Suydam, Mr. Isaac Buchanan.

Committee of Ladies—Mrs. G. F. Betts, Miss Ally A. Stevens, Mrs. Robert B. Howland, Mrs. Robert Colby, Mrs. Albert Gallatin, Mrs. Carl Schurz, Mrs. Thorndike.

Indian Chiefs Before the Historical Society.

The meeting of the Historical Society Monday evening was unusually interesting. The Chiefs of the six tribes were present. Mr. Pierson in Peters presided. Dr. Osgood in a short speech stated the object of the meeting. Mr. in Peters delivered the welcome address to the chiefs, which was interpreted by Mr. Pierson, of the Senecas.

Ionas Jemerson, Chief of the Senecas, responded. The venerable Chief is over 80 years of age. He fought through the war of 1812, and was with Gen. Scott in all his campaigns of that period. The Chief of the Senecas was followed by Dr. Wilson, who exhibited the wampum given to the nations by Gen. Washington. The doctor stated that the occasion was the first on which, since the days of Washington, the representatives of the different tribes had met the "pale faces." On the last occasion, they received from Washington, then President of the United States, the wampum of peace. They were on their way to the capital of the nation to arrange matters concerning their treaties. At the conclusion of Dr. Wilson's address, Dr. Osgood offered the following:

Resolved, That we thank our friends of the Six Nations for the instruction and satisfaction of this interview, and we give them our best wishes for the success of their mission to the seat of Government.

Dr. Thompson, in seconding the resolution, made a few remarks, after which the resolution was unanimously adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

The Death Affray in the Sixth Ward.—Coroner Naumann held an inquest yesterday, at the Sixth Precinct Station House, on the body of Thomas McGowan, who died on Wednesday morning, from the effects of injuries inflicted by his partner Patrick Brennan. The testimony given went to show that while the two were engaged in a quarrel, Brennan seized a pane of common window glass, twelve to fourteen inches in size, and struck his partner on the left side of the head. A sharp piece of the glass went entirely through the skull, ruptured a blood-vessel and penetrated the brain. The jury rendered the following verdict: "We find that Thomas McGowan came to his death by compression of the brain, from a blow with a pane of glass in the hands of Patrick Brennan." The latter yesterday gave himself up to the authorities of the Sixth Precinct. When asked the usual questions, he said that he was 26 years of age, native of Ireland, lived at No. 155 Second-street, Williamsburgh, and a peddler by occupation. He further said that McGowan abused him and called him names, and struck him some blows. He said, "I am not guilty." The Coroner committed him to the Tombs to await an indictment by the Grand Jury.

Free Delivery of Letters by Carriers.—One of the most important provisions of the new postal law, is that establishing a free delivery of mail matter by carriers, which was doubtless intended to encourage that method of delivery in preference to the "call" or "box" system, particularly in large cities, and it presents many advantages to the public. Letters are as equally safe in the hands of the carriers as if delivered from a Post-office, and are more certain to be handed to the rightful owners, who are thus saved the time and trouble of calling or sending for their correspondence, which is frequently done where they are no letters for the applicant. Under the old system of delivering letters from Post-offices, when called for, much time is necessarily consumed in arranging letters in boxes for general delivery, and distributing them in separate boxes for those who want the latter; while in each of these operations it is almost impossible to avoid mistakes, particularly at the general delivery, where letters are liable to be misplaced in the press of applicants. From these causes many letters fail to be delivered in due time, and others are sent to the Dead Letter Office.

The Police and the Sanitary Fair.—The members of the Metropolitan Police, aided by their wives and daughters, are making zealous efforts in many of the Precincts to assist the Sanitary Fair, which is to be opened on the 28th inst. in this City. With very few exceptions, they have subscribed liberally to the Police Fund in aid of the Fair—liberal, certainly, when we consider that the income of the men is limited and the most of them have families dependent upon them for support. In the Seventh Precinct, especially, we learn that the wife of Capt. Jamison, Mrs. Sergeant Babcock and Mrs. Buckman, have obtained permission to superintend a table at the fair. They are now engaged in soliciting contributions for the purpose of furnishing and decorating it. The Station-house, situated at Nos. 245 and 247 Madison-street, has been designated as the place where the friends of the enterprise can leave their donations. One dozen of hats already been given under the direction of the police of this precinct, in aid of the object, and another will be given on Thursday evening of the present week.

Bounty Brokers.—Yesterday the following cases were disposed of at Major-Gen. Dix's Headquarters: John Rowland, of Rockland County, charged with swindling a recruit named Michael Kenna, of $240, returned the money and was allowed to depart. Daniel Bell and Barron Barnes, from Kingston, were sent to Fort Lafayette, charged with swindling negro recruits. James Doud, from Brooklyn, was arrested, charged with defrauding a colored recruit, named James Freeze, of $276, and an idiot boy, named Isaac Isaacs, whom he alleged he enlisted, of $300. Doud deposited the money to avoid further investigation, claiming that he could bring evidence to prove himself innocent in the matter. Austin Melloy, who keeps a billiard saloon at No. 21 Baxter-street, was arrested, charged with swindling a recruit named Isaac E. Murray of $275—he was sent to Police Headquarters to give him time to pay up; if he does not, he will be sent to Fort Lafayette.

Pearl Hose Company and the Fair.—The members of Pearl Hose Company No. 25, who have been untiring in their efforts to obtain suitable donations to the Sanitary Fund, gave a reception at the house of the Company on Tuesday evening last to the contributors to their fund. Although the night was stormy and extremely unfavorable, and the reception was an impromptu one, yet the affair was a great success, and reflects great credit upon the committee who improvised it. It was intended that this should have been the closing night of the exhibition, but as the opening of the Metropolitan Fair has been postponed, this Company has concluded to keep open house on Monday and Wednesday evenings next for donations.

A Ball for the Benefit of the New-York Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum.—The claims of the orphan on the charity of the public are ever to be remembered. On Tuesday evening next a ball will be given at the Academy of Music for the benefit of the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum in this City. The entire proceeds are to be handed over to the Trustees of the Asylum, who will use them in the manner that will be most conducive to the well-being and comfort of the orphans under their charge. From the number of tickets already sold, the affair promises to be most successful. A number of our most prominent business men have taken hold of the matter, as regards its management, and on Tuesday evening next the Academy is expected to be thronged with a brilliant assemblage.

Felonious Assault with a Knife.—A young man, named John McGrath was arrested on Friday afternoon by Officer Barron, of the Eighth Precinct, charged with assaulting and stabbing Robert G. Watson, of No. 41 Waite-street. Three wounds were inflicted with a knife on the left side of Watson's face. His physician regards the injuries as of a dangerous character. Theodore Jackson, of No. 23 Walker-street, also made a complaint against McGrath for chasing and making an assault on him with a knife at the same time. The accused was highly excited with liquor when he made the assault, and when arraigned in court seemed not to know what transpired. Justice Dodge committed McGrath to await the result of Watson's injuries.

Sale of Pictures.—To-day, the 26th of March, Messrs. H. H. Lyons & Co. will sell, at their gallery, No. 25 Nassau-street, a valuable collection of drawings by the London Sketching Club, the only one on sale in this country. In these remarkable improvisations in art, C. R. Leslie, Stanfield and Cruikshank are largely represented. The collection also includes a number of original drawings by Sir Thomas Lawrence, J. M. W. Turner, Sir David Wilkie, and other great artists.

Before the United States Commissioner.—Isaac Oliver and Philip W. Green, who were arrested some time since on charge of giving aid and comfort to the enemy and sent to Fort Lafayette, were on Thursday, by order of Gen. Dix, turned over to Commissioner Comstock, who held them in bail in the sum of $5,000 each. Oliver giving the required surety, was released. The examination of Cozzi, the mate of the ship Victory, charged with the murder of a messenger, still continues. Yesterday several witnesses were examined, whose testimony was favorable to the defence.

The Late Lieut. Hunter.—When the drowning casualty which occurred in the East River, some days since, was noticed, the report was given currency that Lieut. Hunter, who was drowned, was intoxicated. This is incorrect; he was not only not intoxicated then, but at no time had those on Riker's Island known him to be. His friends naturally feel grieved at the unwarranted imputation, and in justice to the unfortunate officer and to them, the correction should be made.

Place for the Children's Department of the Metropolitan Fair.—Owners of large spaces are earnestly requested to give the loan of their flags—of all sizes—to this department. The Committee will call for such flags, having them in each case duly marked and signed with the owner's name. Office on Union-square, No. 32 East 17th-st., in the Seminary.

Bounty Brokers Again at Work.—The recent large arrival of emigrants at Castle Garden has indeed another raid of bounty brokers on the Sanitary grounds. Yesterday several unsuspecting foreigners were "picked up," and their sudden absence, although a surprise to their friends, was not a mystery to the police.

Drowned.—A boatman commonly known as Pat Hanlan, was accidentally drowned yesterday, near the foot of Sixth-street, East River. The body was not recovered.

Poetical Recitations.—Miss Helen Vane gives poetical recitations at Clinton Hall this evening, under the auspices of the Mercantile Library Association.

Inquest.—Coroner Barlow yesterday held an inquest on the body of Mrs. Susan Nolan, at East New-York, who died from intemperance. Verdict accordingly.

Arrival of Emigrants.—The ship Bridgewater, from Liverpool, arrived yesterday, bringing 800 emigrants.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Richmond files from March 15 to March 21, inclusive, were received yesterday. The papers discuss the prospects of the opening campaign with their usual bitterness, and draw highly rose-colored conclusions as to what the results will be. They affect to believe that the strength of the National Army is soon to be greatly reduced, and draw much consolation from this belief—a thing which we can very safely encourage them in. Grant is spoken of with contempt, though the undeniable fact of his enormous successes in the West is reluctantly confessed. In brief, the rebel papers are at their old work of bolstering up their sinking cause by holding out false hopes, and while so doing, comes an ominous movement from Georgia, hitherto one of the most radical of the seceded States, whose Governor, State Legislature and press propose to test the validity of the late sweeping acts of the rebel Congress by the action of Georgia's own courts, particularly the act suspending the habeas corpus. The war news is not important. The released rebel prisoners had been received with an ovation, including speeches by Jeff. Davis and Gov. Smith. Gen. Joe Johnston's report of the disastrous rebel operations in Mississippi last summer, is printed, in which he throws the whole blame upon Gen. Pemberton. The rebels profess to be rapidly repairing the damage done to Mississippi railroads by Gen. Sherman. Another raid by Gen. Averill was feared, and the rebel Gen. Jones had gone into Kentucky by way of an unfrequented gap to try another raid.

A dispatch from Washington states that Gen. Pleasonton has been relieved from the command of the cavalry corps, Army of the Potomac, and ordered to report to Gen. Rosecrans; Gen. Sykes is ordered to report to Gen. Curtis; Gen. Newton to Gen. Sherman; Gen. French to report at Philadelphia; Gen. Meredith to report at Cairo; Gens. Ricketts, Gibbon and Wadsworth to Gen. Meade for assignments to command, and Gen. Caldwell is relieved to enable him to sit as court-martial, and Gen. Spinola is ordered on similar duty.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, the Vice-President submitted a communication from the President, inclosing a report from the Secretary of State, in relation to the establishment of a monarchical Government in Central and South America. Referred, and ordered to be printed. Mr. Trumbull introduced a bill to construct a ship canal from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River. Mr. Collamer introduced a bill to authorize the Postmaster-General to contract for carrying the overland mails from Atchison, Kansas, to Folsom's, California. The bill to prevent military interference in elections was taken up, and Mr. Saulsbury addressed the Senate at great length in its favor. The Senate then agreed to the report of the Conference Committee on the West Point Military Academy Bill, and then adjourned until Monday.

In the House, yesterday, Mr. Washburne, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to prevent fraud in the changing of names of vessels. The House passed the Senate bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to certain parties duplicates of bonds, to the amount of $8,000, the originals having been lost on the steamship Golden Gate. The National Bank Bill came up in regular order, and an endeavor was made to have it postponed until Monday, to enable the suggestions of a committee from the New-York Clearing-house to be heard. This did not prevail, and a motion to stop debate prevailed by the casting vote of the Speaker. The House then went into a sort of humorous filibustering scene, which finally delayed action so that the House adjourned, and the bill went over until to-day, when it will come up again, as the House has agreed to devote Saturday to public business hereafter, instead of speech-making.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, the result of the official canvass of the election on the 8th inst., relative to soldiers voting, was announced, showing that of 83,455 ballots cast, 48,079 were against the amendment. A petition was presented for a railroad in Fifty-ninth-street, New-York, and also from the Staten Island Ferry Company for a new ferry-slip. A number of reports of not very general interest were made, after which Mr. Duchman called from the table the adverse report on the Harlem-Broadway Railroad Bill, and moved a disagreement with it, and a reference of the subject to the Committee of the Whole. A vote was taken and the motion was lost, by 24 against 4. A bill was introduced to incorporate the Ripple and Pierpont Railroad.

In the Assembly the entire morning session was occupied in the consideration of the Annual Supply Bill, and progress was reported upon it. Among the bills advanced to a third reading were the following: For the safe-keeping of valuable articles; making appropriation for charitable institutions; legalizing the action of the New-York Common Council to establish the Metropolitan Market of New-York; incorporating the Neptune Steamship Company; to repeal the Hudson River Bridge Act. The following were introduced for the consideration of the House: To incorporate the European Passenger Company; for a drawbridge over Flushing Creek; relative to the Harlem Navigation Company; for a railroad in Walkhill and other streets in New-York; authorizing the Third-avenue Railroad Company to extend their tracks.

GENERAL NEWS.

"Jon Conuer," of this City, who claims to be the champion of America, and "Jim Mace," who claims the championship of England, have agreed upon a match, which will come off in Ireland at a time to be agreed upon. $1,500 is to be paid Conuer for expenses, and the amount fought for, not yet fixed upon, will be from $1,500 to $2,500. Considerable excitement is existing in sporting circles in consequence, and Conuer will be freely backed.

The necessity of some relief to Broadway—none so good as the tunnel railroad—was evidenced yesterday. For many hours the street was blocked below Fulton-street, and progress was impossible. The Police were powerless to relieve the situation, and fights, oaths and growlings predominated.

A huge invoice of pepper, imported per ship Tacia, was withdrawn from bonded warehouse on Thursday, the duties paid thereon (in coin) amounting to the extraordinary sum of $120,054, being the largest single item of the kind in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant" of the Custom-house.

The Reformed Dutch Church (Rev. Mr. Van Liew's) at Readington, N. J., was entirely consumed by fire on Thursday morning. Cause—a defective stove-pipe. It was insured for $4,000.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, wife of Judge Vanderbilt, of Flatbush, who was shot by a ruffian seeking to murder a girl in her employ, is somewhat better, and hopes are entertained of her recovery.

Flour advanced yesterday 5c.@10c. ₩ bbl., with sales of 19,600 bbls., and Wheat 1c.@2c. ₩ bushel, with sales of 114,000 bushels; Mixed Western Corn and Prime Oats were a shade higher, with a fair inquiry. Provisions were generally brisker and much firmer. Whisky was freely purchased at $1@$1 05—the latter an extreme rate. Teas and Coffee were in brisk demand, chiefly on speculation, at much firmer prices. Cotton, Hay, Clover Seed, Sugars and Molasses were in fair request and buoyant. Tallow, Petroleum and Fire-Crackers were actively sought after at advancing prices. The Freight market was quiet.

The Army of the Potomac and its Reorganization.

It is hardly possible, without some acquaintance with the interior constitution of an army, as modern armies are organized, to appreciate how profoundly the entire structure of the Army of the Potomac will be affected by the brief order of the War Department yesterday made public. The official document simply announces a consolidation of the First and Third Corps with the three remaining corps of that army, which will henceforth be composed of the Second, Fifth and Sixth Corps.

Now, the making good of this order involves first a process of analysis, by which the corps organization of the two named bodies will be resolved into its subordinate units of force—that is, into its divisions; the divisions into their brigades, and the brigades into their battalions or regiments; and then a process of synthesis, whereby the battalions, brigades and divisions of the two consolidated corps will be distributed among and interwoven with the three corps which will henceforth constitute the Army of the Potomac. In the realization of this reorganization, therefore, every member of the army, whether superior or subordinate, will find itself more or less touched in its position, its relations or its Commander. Two Corps Commanders of course lose their commands, and the same fate befalls several Division and Brigade Commanders. The men find themselves among new associates, surrounded by other traditions, and led by different leaders.

This radical transformation touches a set of interests, associations, and, if you will, prejudices, that should not be lightly dealt with. A corps d'armée is, as the very name imports, an army body; that is, it is an individual unit of force, capable of moving, and of fighting, independently. It is the creation of the great Napoleon, and is adopted in the organization of every modern army. But a corps has not only an existence of its own—it has a history of its own, and a history with which those belonging to it come to identify themselves most intimately. Sharing the fortunes and the toils, the traditions and the glories of their special corps, soldiers feel themselves personally bound up with it. The "Gallant Second," the "Fighting Sixth," (we use these epithets merely by way of illustration,) become to every man wearing the trefoil of the one, or the cross of the other, objects of special pride and affection. They of course glory in the army, whose larger honors and history they share; but their corps they love with an affection that is peculiar and personal. Now, we say that such sentiments should be tenderly dealt with. They form the very essence of that quality which, taking its name from the organizations of which we have been speaking, is called esprit de corps—an impalpable but potent spirit which constitutes the strongest cohesive force of an army, and by enlisting the imagination, the pride, the ambition of soldiers, indefinitely multiplies their moral power.

It is plain, from these considerations, that such relations should only be disturbed when the interference is authorized by some adequate compensating advantage. We believe such is the case in the reorganization that has been effected in the Army of the Potomac, and we will very briefly touch on some of the reasons that may have prompted the consolidation of the First and Third Corps. And firstly, all the corps have, by losses in battle and by disease, become greatly reduced in numbers. For example, the Second Corps alone has lost not less than twenty-five thousand men. A corps with its full complement should number forty thousand; but such as, previously to the late recruiting, had one-half that strength would have been accounted unusually strong, and there were others that had not more than one-fourth that number—that is, the strength of a full division. The consolidation of the five corps into three will therefore give to each something like its adequate effective force. It will also put the army in better marching, maneuvering, and fighting trim. The three corps will form a natural Right, Left and Centre—a result which has frequently to be obtained by an inconvenient covering of divisions and transferring them previously to other commands. Gen. Burnside sought to effect the same object by forming the six corps, then constituting the Potomac army, into three "Grand Divisions" of two corps each—a plan theoretically good, and modeled after the French system, but which, in practice, was not found to work well, chiefly from a defect which it has been one of the aims of the present reorganization to remedy. The fault to which we allude lay with the Corps Commanders, some of whom, whether through personal views, through lukewarmness and want of zeal, or through a constitutional leaning to mere red-tape and routine, exercised their high commands in such a fashion as to baulk and bring to naught several well-planned operations.

The three Generals now commanding the three corps of the Army of the Potomac are each of them men of approved ability, zeal and energy: Sedgwick, the vieux sabreur, devoted to duty, indomitable, and not to be beaten or broken even by the legions that enveloped him on the heights of Fredericksburg—Hancock, the hero of Gettysburg, an officer of the highest executive ability, unequaled in his eye for ground, and in action rapid as the electric flash—Warren, a brilliant young soldier, the victor of Bristoe, and the Dessaix of the war.

Looking at it as a whole, therefore, we regard the present reorganization of the Army of the Potomac as what its numerous previous reorganizations have not been—a positive and substantial improvement. And if it dissolves some old associations, and breaks up some ancient comradeship, we trust those affected by it will be contented for the sake of its larger results.

In carrying out the consolidation Gen. Meade has been careful to consult the sentiments to which we have alluded, and has permitted the members of the merged corps to retain their corps badges.

The Army of the Potomac, as it stands to-day, is in its numbers, its organization, its Commanders, its discipline, and its morale, in a condition of strength and efficiency surpassing any previous period of its history. May it be rewarded for all its toils, all its merits and all its reverses, by the splendor and success of the coming campaign under Lieut.-Gen. Grant.

What Are We Coming To, and When Shall We Reach It?

The pressure on our space of other matter has prevented us from recurring to the serious and important topic of "Miscegenation." We regret very much, however, having allowed our attention to be even temporarily diverted from it, as we find from the earnest discussion which it is receiving at the hands of our cotemporaries, that it has lost none of its importance. In fact, if we are to believe what we hear, especially from the recognized and authoritative organs of the Democratic party, the rage for marrying black people, which has taken possession of the Republican party, is rather on the increase. It is said, we know not with what truth, that the Union League Club has fitted up a nuptial bell at its door in Union-square, and keeps a black minister on the premises, who marries all couples of different colors at any hour of the day or night. An effort is said to have been made by the leaders of the party to stave off these alliances until after the meeting of the Convention next July, when the campaign would have fairly commenced; but it was all in vain. The radicals have carried everything before them, and, if things go on at their present rate, it is feared that in three months every white man who is not connected by marriage with a colored family, will be "read out" of the party. The gusto with which the young people go into this insane movement is something at once disgusting and alarming. Two duels are said to have been already fought about one middle-aged black washerwoman, the rivals being young men of the best society; and those families whose colored servants have remained with them up to the present, have been compelled to give them notice, owing to the crowds of wealthy but degraded white men who throng the basement for the purpose of soliciting the honor (!) of their hands. We shrink from putting on paper the stories which reach us as to the prevalence amongst young white ladies of a preference for colored men—pure blacks having the precedence in all cases where there is room for choice. We will only say that there will very soon be hardly a family in the City belonging to the Republican persuasion, which will not be glorying in the possession of a negro son-in-law; and what is most horrible about the matter is, that a fund has been raised by members of the Loyal League for the transportation from the South, of colored beaux and belles, with the truly fiendish design of guarding against the possibility of an exhaustion of the supply in this quarter.

It may readily be imagined that it is with great reluctance that we speak out our minds in this matter. But we have no hesitation in saying that if we had at the outset conceived it possible that hostility to Slavery would ever have led to wholesale intermarriage with negroes, or of all marriageable Republicans and their sisters, that party should never have received any countenance or support from this journal. We owe it to ourselves and posterity to say that the odious matrimonial arrangements, into which so many of those whose opinions on certain great questions of public policy we have hitherto shared, have taken us wholly by surprise.

In fact the idea of a large body of men or women marrying at all, not to speak of marrying negroes for the mere purpose of helping their party in a presidential campaign, or propagating any "views," either in religion, morals, or physiology, never entered our heads. We now see, and confess our error and deplore it.

The question of course which naturally suggests itself to every right-minded white man and woman, is, Where is this thing to end? Whither are we tending? What is to be done to stay this most unnatural and detestable movement. For it is as plain as a pikestaff that if it continues, there will be soon no whites left in this once great and prosperous country. We shall all be mulattoes, and be afflicted with all the peculiarities both mental and physical of that unhappy race. The signs of this great and terrible change already begin to make themselves manifest in our streets; for the most careless observer who walks down Broadway, can hardly fail to observe the appearance on a vast number of faces, of the well-known brownish tinge. Let that tinge once become general, and then "farewell, a long farewell to all our whiteness!"

There is but one quarter—and we are not ashamed to own it—to which, in our opinion, we can look for either help or comfort at this crisis, and that is to the great, old, truly National Democratic party. It has its faults; nobody has been forced to call attention to them oftener than we; but it has never yet proved false to its race, and we are satisfied that whatever can be done now will be done by it to preserve the purity of our blood. We mentioned a few days ago the steps taken by the "Society for the Diffusion of Political Information;" but these steps, important as they were, were but preliminaries to still more energetic action. Bishop Hopkins, we are glad to say, has arrived in town; Professor Morse was already here; Mr. James Brooks and the Count Joannes are on their way, and the negrophilists and their dusky paramours—we will not honor them with the sacred name of husband or wife—already begin to tremble. We believe we are not violating any confidence in stating that the learned and able Dr. Randolph, the Bowery Spiritual Medium, who preaches "the gospel according to John C. Calhoun" in that region on Sundays, and the author of the great work on "Miscegenation," has been elected an honorary member of that body, and will aid it at this juncture by his invaluable counsel and cooperation.

Pending the preparation of Bishop Hopkins' monograph on Ham as a Husband and Father, and Prof. Morse's Disquisition on the Ethical Relations of White Men and Black Women, the society has determined to draft a bill, to be introduced into the Legislature by Mr. T. C. Fields, dealing with these marriages as they deserve. "Since the laws of nature," it was finely said by a learned member of the body, "seem powerless to prevent them, let us see what an act of the Legislature will do; and if this does not suffice, I, for one, will go for putting them down by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States." The bill to be laid before the Legislature declares, we understand, all marriages hitherto entered into, or that may hereafter be entered into, between whites and colored persons, null and void; declares that portion of the law of nature which forbids a man's marrying his grandmother applicable to all such cases, and finally provides that all children born of such marriages shall be white, and that the circumference of their calves, the length of their heels, and the size of their facial angle shall be determined by Judges of the Supreme Court sitting at Chambers, without appeal, on the motion of any white man one year resident in the State.

The Underground Railway.

The bill of which we spoke the other day, authorizing the construction of an Underground Railroad from Central Park to the Battery, has been introduced into the Legislature. In addition to the main line, it is proposed also to construct branches, connecting it with the Harlem, New-Haven and Hudson River Railroads. There are to be stations at convenient points, say at the City Hall, Canal-street, Astor-place, Union-square, Madison-square, etc., etc. The corporators, fifty in number, embrace some of our most substantial and respectable citizens, among whom we may name Jonathan Sturges, John J. Astor, Jr., Moses Taylor, Francis Skiddy, John J. Phelps, James B. Johnson, and J. F. D. Lanier.

The project, though a novel one on this side of the water, as we stated in our former article, is by no means an untried experiment. It proposes to adopt what has proved to be a complete success in London, where an underground railway has been in operation for more than a year past, from the Great Western Railway station to a point within a few minutes' walk of the Bank of England. This railway has proved a complete success in every point of view, speedily becoming a favorite route of travel, and consequently highly productive on its cost—the shares advancing, within a very few months after its opening, to fifty per cent premium. The trains are drawn by locomotive, coke-burning engines, which run at the ordinary rate of speed. The tunnel is well ventilated. Its temperature is always uniform. It is free from dust or noise, and is entirely safe from accidents. Indeed, so complete has been the success of the experiment, that all London is alive with similar enterprises. It is proposed to construct a most elaborate system of underground railways for the accommodation of every portion of the great metropolis. For this purpose no less than $40,000,000 have been raised. The engineering difficulties encountered are considered of no moment whatever compared with the objects to be gained, as it is shown by the fact that one of the lines proposed, and which will, doubtless, be speedily executed, is to run some three-fourths of a mile directly under the bed of the Thames!

The work proposed for New-York solves at once and effectually the problem how to relieve our over-crowded streets, while it will equalize as nearly as possible the value of property throughout the whole Island. Without some better and more speedy mode of conveyance than at present furnished, it could not be long before the business of Wall would move up to Canal street. But provide the means whereby the merchant and banker can be carried all the way from his residence to within a few hundred feet of his place of business at the rate of 20 miles an hour, and the lower part of the Island must always remain the favorite site of commerce and trade. Central Park will then be within fifteen minutes' time of the Battery. For all those living beyond the limits of the City, north and northeast, nearly an hour will be saved; at 25 miles distant, not over an hour need be consumed by a business man in reaching his office.

The work proposed would be equally important as a means of distributing freight as of passengers. The freight trains would run at night, say from 11 P. M. to 5 A. M. With it, all our butchering establishments, now public nuisances, could be removed twenty miles distant, and fresh meats, with milk, vegetables, fruits, and in fact food of all kinds, could be delivered by rail at a dozen different and convenient points. Merchandise designed for exportation from the city could be collected during the day at different stations, and loaded and moved off, with a vast saving over the present cost. In fact, the proposed work would, as we have already remarked, fulfill every condition necessary to the complete convenience both of the travel and commerce of our City.

The engineering questions involved, though apparently formidable, are really of the simplest character. The tunnel would be lined with a water-tight brick arch, similar to that under the Thames;—with the exception of one point, Canal-street, it would drain itself. Here a steam-pumping engine could be kept for emergency. At any other point, the bottom of the tunnel would be above high water mark. Bowling Green, which is to be the lower passenger station, is now 14 feet 8 inches above high tide; the surface of Broadway at Wall-street, 34 feet 6 inches; at Canal-street, 16 feet 6 inches; at Bleecker-street 39 feet. The rise from thence is regular to the Central Park, whence the branch tunnels would begin to fall off toward the North and East Rivers. The entire route for the road and branches has been carefully examined, and maps and profiles constructed, showing the situation of the sewers, water and gas mains, with all the other obstacles and impediments likely to be encountered. The result shows a most favorable route, and that the cost of construction would by no means be excessive, considering the vast importance of the enterprise.

It is one of the great merits of the proposed work, that it would disturb no vested rights, nor interfere with any possible public or private interest. It would not only harm no one, but it will be entirely out of the way of being harmed. It will be more convenient both for freight and passengers, than if above ground. The cost of constructing a tunnel would be more than compensated by the advantages of an underground road. This is the view of the subject taken by its projectors, and so strongly are they impressed with its importance, that there is little doubt that with the necessary authority, the capital required could be readily obtained.

Gen. Sherman Right on the Record.—Gen. W. T. Sherman's late report of his operations of last Winter furnishes a satisfactory explanation of a portion of his conduct, that was at the time and has continued to be made the subject of considerable censure. We refer to his failure to pursue Longstreet, after that General had given up the siege of Knoxville in December last. The object of Gen. Sherman's march to Knoxville was to relieve Gen. Burnside, whose position was invested by the rebels, and who, on account of the shortness of supplies, found himself in an extremely critical situation. The day before the arrival of Gen. Sherman's column, and doubtless in consequence of having received intelligence of its approach, Longstreet withdrew from Burnside's front. In this state of facts Gen. Burnside himself judged best that Gen. Sherman, instead of attempting to follow up Longstreet, should countermarch to Chattanooga, where, on account of the great diminution of force, Gen. Thomas' position was not accounted entirely secure. Gen. Burnside simply requested of Gen. Sherman that he would leave with him the two divisions under command of Gen. Gordon Granger, and this was freely done. Gen. Burnside's opinion is expressed in the following terms:

"The emergency having passed, I do not deem for the present any other portion of your command but the corps of Gen. Granger necessary for operations in this section; and inasmuch as Gen. Grant has weakened the force immediately with him in order to follow us, thereby rendering the position of Gen. Thomas less secure, I deem it advisable that all the troops now here, save those commanded by Gen. Granger, should return at once to within supporting distance of the forces in front of Bragg's army."

This should set at rest forever the carping criticism that was so freely pronounced on the conduct of an officer whose devotion to duty as well as distinguished ability should have given pause to the tongue of censure.

American Ideas.—Two of our "Yankee notions" have already been tried in the present war of Denmark with the allies. We allude to the monitor ship and the use of artificial light for siege operations by night. It was calcium light that was used by Gen. Gillmore for illuminating the harbor of Charleston, so that he could carry on artillery operations and watch the enemy's movements at night; and the Danes, in their defence at Sonderborg, experimented with electric light to watch the enemy's night movements, and to enable the artillery of the forts to fire when it was dark. The low iron-clad used by the Danes had also points of variation from ours. The Rolfe Krake, which suffered considerable damage in an attack on the Prussian pontoon bridge, at their position at Egernsund, is described as a powerful boat-clad, with two turrets or cupolas, armed each of them with two 64-pounders. She is 120 feet in length by 34 feet broad, is of 250 horse-power, and can run nine knots an hour in smooth water; but her officers think that the attempt to combine sailing power with the efficiency of a monitor, has been crowned with but indifferent success. While, on one hand, she would have a poor chance in heavy weather in the Baltic, on the other she is too deep in the water to be of great use in shallow inland seas.

FROM ST. DOMINGO AND HAVANA.

Gen. Gandara Appointed Captain-General of St. Domingo—Will St. Domingo be lost?—A Dominican Insurgent sent to Spain—Apprehension of an Absconding Clerk in New-York—The Weather in Havana—Another Snap of Cold at Home.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

Havana, Friday, March 18, 1864.

Gen. Gandara has been appointed Captain-General of the Spanish part of St. Domingo, and also promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General in the Spanish service. He has been very rapid, having been only a few years ago a Brigadier-General. He has, however, seen much service, and was for several years stationed at the unhealthy Island of Fernando Po, on the Coast of Africa. He has been staying here for the last week, a guest of the Marquis of Mariscal. The military promotion of Gandara, and his appointment in the place of Vivanco, who has received no recompense for his services, is a proof that the course of the latter in the Spanish Government is not at all approved of. His second in command, Serrano, has gone to Madrid to lay before the Government the impossibility of holding possession of the island, which the Spanish accounts impute to the nature of the climate, and seek to ridicule the prowess of their opponents. The fatal character of the former to the new troops from Spain is plainly evinced by the large number of sick soldiers that have been brought here from St. Domingo, but among them there are also not a few who are in the hospitals as patients, not from the fevers and diseases of the country, but from wounds received in engagements with the insurgents.

Although military preparations are still carried on as if an expedition was being prepared against some point, said to be Monte Cristi, yet, in my humble opinion, it is very doubtful whether the Spaniards will attempt anything further for the subjugation of the rebels before next Winter. Most probably the utmost they will do will be to hold possession of the Capital, and some other places, as strongholds; indeed, it is insisted by many, and among them are well informed persons, that it is the intention of the Spanish Government to leave the island entirely.

I mentioned, in my last letter, the death of Gen. Figueroa. Although a negro, and notwithstanding the attempts of the Spaniards to lower him in the rank of a quasi leader of bandits, he was a man of great influence in the southern part of the island, and held important offices in the former republic. However they might try afterward to depreciate his character, the Spanish Government, on the breaking out of the insurrection, offered him a place in their service; but as he was already doubtless engaged in the service of his country, he would not accept of it, pleading, as an excuse, that he could not leave his home on account of sickness. It is said that he acted independently of the Provisional Government, and that he was killed by the General who had been sent by it to supersede him, and whom, on his first coming, he had seized and put in prison, but who, having escaped, returned again to take his place, and, in a dispute, killed him.

The Spanish accounts represent Figueroa as responsible to the extreme—assuming all the booty he could collect for an escape into Hayti, in case of extremities.

The Madrid correspondence of the Diario de la Marina says that the Insurgent Government of Salcedo had made application at Washington to be recognized as a belligerent, and that letters-of-marque might be made out for American vessels, but that the Government of the United States had refused to grant what would be an act of hostility, as it is designated, against Spain.

The Spanish troops have had many difficulties to struggle with in St. Domingo, for, in addition to the climate, their commissariat department was badly provided, the men oftentimes being obliged to lie down on the ground without tents to shelter them, and at other times without provisions, so that I have heard say the soldiers have been ready to let their arms drop from their hands from exhaustion, having been (it appears almost incredible, but I have been assured of it as a fact) for three days together without tasting any food.

The Spanish war steamer Princesa de Asturias had left St. Domingo for Hayti, for the purpose, it was reported at the former place, of taking on board at Port-au-Prince, the 250 prisoners taken by the Dominicans at Santiago or los Caballeros, and whom they had sent into Hayti from not having the means of supporting them.

One of the Dominican insurgents, named Valverde, who was brought here some time ago a prisoner, and confined in the Moro Castle, was sent to Spain in the steamer that left on the 15th, to undergo punishment, possibly at Ceuta, in Africa.

The clerk of a firm here, Messrs. Du m Cuez & Co., has, it appears, been arrested in New-York, at the instigation of one of their correspondents, for a series of forgeries on the firm by means of false bills of exchange on houses of New-York and London. He absconded on the 23d of January, and was arrested in your City on the 23d of the following month.

It appears, by letters directed to the clerk here in Havana, and sent from London, but which fell into the possession of his employers, that Messrs. Sonnenzen & Co., of London, had honored one of the forged bills of exchange, to the amount of £2,040 7s. 2d., and had remitted to him a box containing £2,000 in gold. Messrs. Baring & Co. also acknowledged the receipt of another of these bills of exchange for the value of 25,575 francs, and sent word that they had remitted, by means of their agents at Boston, £2,500 in gold, to be paid to one Figueroa. The name of the clerk is Ramon Cuez, and he was arrested in New-York at the moment of going to receive a sum of money for another forged bill of exchange on a house of your City.

Easter, which is very early this year, has the appearance of being a cool one for our tropical climate. The weather the day before yesterday changed from warmth to comparative cold, making cloth clothes and overcoats still more endurable in the West Indies. It is, however, only a scan that cannot last for any length of time; old Sol is now too vigorous in his strength to allow the force of his rays to be more than momentarily diminished. It is at present only the contest of Winter and Summer in the nasty, gusty month of Spring, where the latter of the combatants will, for certain, come out the conqueror. LARA.

Parade of Colored People and a Colored Regiment To-Day.

The colored people of New-York are making active preparation to join in the parade of the Twenty-sixth United States Colored Regiment, which leaves for the seat of war to-day. They assemble in societies under their respective leaders, and with appropriate banners, &c., at 11 o'clock, in Lafayette-place, then march up Eleventh-street and Fifth-avenue to Madison-square, where they will meet the regiment and escort it down Broadway at 3½ o'clock P. M.

These societies of colored people have not so public parade on each day since the war of 1812.

A Drama Behind the Scenes.—An affair occurred behind the stage of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, on Wednesday night, during the performance of the "Dukes Mote," which has since created no little stir in certain circles. Shortly after the rising of the curtain, a friend of one of the actors presented his card at the stage-door, and, with another gentleman in his company, was admitted to the stage. During the third act, while Mlle. Vestvali was awaiting her call behind the scenes, one of these men, affecting to admire her appearance in man's clothes, is said to have laid his hand upon her person and called her a "bully boy," which indignity the lady promptly resented by administering to the offender a severe castigation, and driving him into the street. She also compelled the other man to vacate the premises by most convincing arguments, after which she resumed her duties before the footlights and took her part until the end of the performance in the morning, since suggesting that anything unusual had occurred. The excitement, however, and the effect of frightening Miss Vestvali with it, and the play interrupted for the subsequent night was postponed in consequence.

Persons dying of you are suffering from neglected colds, and consequent inflammation of the delicate lining of those tubes through which the air we breathe is conducted to the lungs. DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED.

No. 420 Sixth-av., New-York, Dec. 2, 1863.

I was deaf for several years, and hearing of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I was induced to place myself under his care, and I am now happy to state that my hearing was entirely restored after a short treatment. I was also suffering from chronic catarrh, of which I was also cured by the skillful treatment of Dr. Von Eisenberg. I do but justice to the Doctor in stating that in treating me he displayed that skill and knowledge which have already procured for him such a deserved reputation, and that the principles which direct his system of curing Deafness and Catarrh are such as to render success certain, in my opinion. Many months have passed since Dr. Von Eisenberg restored my hearing, and it continues as good as ever.

CATARRH CURED.

READ!

There been suffering for a long time from a severe Catarrh, with a continual dullness in my head, a tightness across my chest, a weight over my eyes, which were weak, watery, and very painful. My nostrils were constantly obstructed with a pouring fluid. That frequent sneezing, hoarseness of my voice, often attended with a fullness of my throat, great nervousness, and a continual dropping. Dr. Von Eisenberg has cured me of all these disagreeable sufferings. I may, indeed, say that I feel a new life. The treatment of Dr. Von Eisenberg is as skillful as it is successful. It is in my opinion impossible to overrate the benefit I have received at his hands. I heartily recommend any one suffering like myself to place themselves under Dr. Von Eisenberg's care, with a certainty of being speedily cured.

Therefore deaf for over TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, and Dr. Von Eisenberg operated on both of my ears without the slightest pain—a thing that I could not believe could be done. I now hear well, and feel as I never did for the last twenty years. The dexterity and skill with which the operation was performed evince the highest practical ability, how perfectly. It is now over a month since the operation, and I continue to feel as well as ever.

No. 136 ALLEN-ST., NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1863.

Have been completely deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for above seventeen years, with a disagreeable discharge from both ears, combined with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a good enough practitioner in the City without the slightest relief.

Attended Dr. Von Eisenberg, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unrivaled reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principles which direct his mode of restoring the hearing are, in my opinion, certain.

JOHN TAYLOR.

NEW-YORK, July 18, 1863.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with painful deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. Von Eisenberg removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with congealed blood, relieving her instantaneously (and all without) pain. His skill greatly thanks that she is in attendance to his skill.

CHRONIC CATARRH CURED.

READ.

NEW-YORK, March 25, 1863.

This is to certify, that I have suffered from very severe CHRONIC CATARRH, with a full hearing in the head. I am now completely cleared of catarrh by the skillful treatment of the Doctor, the child standing over me with exceptional hot feelings, against the disease of the chest and pain, of which, at that every time thought it necessary. During board of the great cures performed by Dr. Von Eisenberg, I was often but little hope of success. I am now happy, I am enabled to add my testimonial to the great number already in the Doctor's possession, as to his scientific and successful mode of treatment, as he has shown in my case that skill and knowledge which have procured for him so great a reputation. I am so entirely restored to perfect health that I do most cordially recommend all sufferers from CHRONIC CATARRH and SORE THROAT to apply at once to Dr. Von Eisenberg with a certainty of being cured.

DR. SCHENCK:

Dear Sir: Several months since I was compelled to relinquish active business pursuits, in consequence of a severe cough, connected by exposure. I placed myself under the treatment of my family physician for a time, without apparent relief, and he finally pronounced my lungs diseased, assuring me that it was useless to seek relief from medicines. He informed me that the only means by which my disease could be overcome was by seeking, through stimulating food and proper care, to reinvigorate my system; that if there was sufficient vigor left I might then regain my health, otherwise my case was hopeless. At that time I was rapidly failing, and many of my friends thought I was beyond all hope. My cough was very severe, sometimes lasting for nearly half an hour at a time, with very copious expectoration, often accompanied with blood. My appetite was very poor, and my stomach so extremely weak that I could scarcely eat any food without being compelled to vomit immediately thereafter. After consulting various physicians without success, a friend advised me to give your medicines a trial. In accordance with this advice, I visited you, and the examination under your Respirometer proved very satisfactory, confirming me that you ascertained my case perfectly. I relied upon the treatment prescribed, and in a short time found great relief. I am now enjoying greatly improved health, my cough troubles me very little, my appetite is good, and my strength gradually increasing.

It affords me pleasure to make this acknowledgment of the benefits I have derived from the use of your medicines, as well as to express my gratitude therefor; and I freely make this statement, which you are at liberty to use as you may deem proper, with the sincere hope that it may be the means of benefiting others who may be suffering from the same diseases.

Yours, respectfully,
J. G. BAXTER.

GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLARS
have now been before the public for nearly a year. They are universally pronounced the neatest and best fitting collars extant.
The upper edge presents a perfect curve, free from the angles noticed in all other collars.
The cravat causes no pickers on the inside of the turn-down collar; they are as smooth inside as outside, and therefore perfectly free and easy to the neck.
The Garotte Collar has a smooth and evenly finished edge on both sides.
These collars are not simply flat pieces of paper cut in the form of a collar, but are molded and shaped to fit the neck.
They are made in "Novelty" (or turn-down) style, in every half inch size from 12 to 17 inches, and in "Eureka" or Garotte) from 12 to 17 inches, and packed in "sell 1 sizes" in neat blue cartoons, containing 100 each; also, in smaller ones of 10 each—the latter a very handy package for travelers, army and navy officers.
Every collar is stamped
"GRAY'S PATENT MOLDED COLLARS."

THE CULTIVATION OF THE CRANBERRY is much more easy and successful in the common dry soil or private gardens, market gardens, or in field culture, than in the usual clumsy way in bogs and meadows. The yield this season, in my method of culture, was over 400 bushels per acre. Explicit directions for cultivation, with price of cranberry plants and all other useful and ornamental trees, plants and shrubs, will be sent by mail. Plants prepaid by mail.

Persons of sedentary habits troubled with weakness, costiveness, palpitation of the heart, loss of appetite, dizziness after eating, torpid liver, constipation, &c., deserve to suffer if they will not try the celebrated which are now recommended by the highest medical authorities, and warranted to produce an invigorating beneficial effect. They are exceedingly agreeable, perfectly pure, and must supersede all other tonics where a healthy, gentle stimulant is required.
They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They overcome effects of dissipation and late hours.
They strengthen the system and enlighten the mind.
They prevent miasmic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Diarrhœa and Cholera Morbus.
They give Life and Vigor to the Aged and Infirm.
They make the weak strong, the languid brilliant, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are composed of the celebrated Calisaya bark, wintergreen, sassafras, roots and herbs, all preserved in perfectly pure St. Croix rum. For particulars see circulars and testimonials around each bottle.
Beware of imposters. Examine every bottle. See that it has our private United States stamp unmutilated over the cork, with plantation scene, and our signature on a fine steel plate side label. See that our bottle is not refilled with spurious and defective imitations, persons pretending to sell Plantation Bitters by the gallon or in bulk, is an imposter. Any person refilling this bottle, or selling any other material therein, whether called Plantation Bitters or not, is a criminal under the United States law, and will be so prosecuted by us. We already have our eye on several parties refilling our bottles, and who will succeed in getting themselves into close quarters. The demand for Drake's Plantation Bitters from ladies, clergymen, merchants, &c., is incredible. The simple trial of a bottle is the evidence we present of their worth and superiority. They are sold by all respectable druggists, grocers, physicians, hotels, saloons, steamboats and country stores.

Parents, and all interested in education, aware of the value of poetry as an element of the best culture, have felt the want of a more extensive and various collection of poetical pieces, suited to different ages, than is at present accessible—a volume which, while it retains the old favorites, shall, by introducing new and choice though less known pieces, contribute a more abundant variety. The present selection is intended to meet this want. Preference has generally been given to lively and striking pieces. Picturesque, descriptive, narrative and domestic pieces have been particularly sought, as they generally find their way readily to young hearts.

GOOD'

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

FRIDAY, March 25—P. M.

The Stock Exchange was closed to-day, and there was a half holiday at Bank and in business circles generally. The Treasury Office was kept open, and subscriptions to the new 6 ⅌ cent. Loan were received to the extent of $874,000. We have no report of the amount applied for at the National Banks.

The Gold Room was also kept open, though a motion was made last evening to keep Good Friday in common with the Stock Exchange. The speculators for the rise, under the cornering practice of Mr. MORRIS EKTOMUM and one or two other sharp Brokers in Exchange-place, had the market their own way, and put up the price to 163@163¼ ⅌ cent., while Bills on London were done 160 ⅌ cent. relatively cheaper than Gold. The last price, at 4 o'clock, was 163¼@163¾ ⅌ cent.

There was a considerable crowd of Stock speculators in William-street through the forenoon. The price of Harlem broke down 13 per cent., and the price of Erie Preferred went up 2½ per cent., both on legislation at Albany. Large sales of Harlem were made at 120 per cent. Illinois Central, Fort Wayne and some of the other Western Bonds were firm. Erie Common Stock sold about 125¼@125½ per cent.

The daily clearings between the Associated Banks, growing mainly out of the speculation on the Stock Exchange, now exceed one hundred millions of dollars per day. Last week the average was $103,856,476 per day. Some of our non-speculative Bank managers may possibly be alarmed at the magnitude of these transactions; based, as most of them are, upon Railway and other Share values which have gone up, within the past six or twelve months, 30@40@50 ⅌ cent., and even in many instances doubled their market rates. At Bank, the certification of the daily checks of the Brokers on these exaggerated values and the demand loans made upon the hypothecation of the Stocks themselves, of course involve immense responsibility, but these are not thought much of while many of the Bank officials and Directors themselves join in the high carnival of speculation, and lend their names to give its latest sanction or "good thing" additional éclat.

The new Mining Schemes called at the Stock Exchange Board, we learn, are not all on the free list any more than on the regular official list of the Board. But, under an old rule of the Exchange, any stock not in either can be called up at the close of the morning session, and dealt in, on the payment of 25 cents for this privilege. It is under this rule that a quasi sanction is given to the respectability of these schemes, by officially printing the sales thus cheaply licensed. The rule referred to was evidently not made for times like the present.

The Cincinnati Gazette says of the Marietta and Cincinnati Road:

"The engineer has completed the surveys for the bridge over the Ohio River from Belpre to Parkersburgh, R. & C. Railroad, and is now engaged on the plan and drawing. It is expected that the work on this important structure will be commenced this Spring.

The imports entire of Foreign Dry Goods at the port of New-York for the week ending March 24, were $1,711,296, against $1,082,654, same week last year, and $1,156,124 the corresponding week of 1862. The following is the summary for the week:

| CONSUMPTION ENTRY. | | | | WAREHOUSE. | | WITHDRAWN. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Pkgs. | Value. | | Pkgs. | Value. | Pkgs. | Value. |
| Wool | 1,320 | $548,020 | Silk | 1,253,716 | 270 | $97,156 |

MUSICAL.

CHICKERING & SONS
MANUFACTURERS OF GRAND, SQUARE AND UPRIGHT PIANO-FORTES, No. 652 BROADWAY.—The superiority of these instruments has of late been amply demonstrated by the voluntary testimony of the foremost artists of the day, who claim for them excellence of tone and workmanship hitherto unobtained by any other makers.
Mr. Gottschalk's constant use of the NEW SCALE CHICKERING GRAND PIANO-FORTES has severely tested their musical qualities, and resulted in establishing the justice of the very flattering estimation in which they are held.

STEINWAY & SONS'
GOLD MEDAL GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS are now considered the best in Europe as well as this country, having received the first Prize Medal at the World's Exhibition in London, 1862.
The principal reason why the Steinway Pianos are superior to all others is, that the firm is composed of five practical pianoforte makers, (father and four sons,) who invent all their own improvements, and under whose personal supervision every part of their pianos is manufactured. Warerooms, Nos. 71 and 73 East Fourteenth-st., between Union-square and Irving-place, N. Y.

HAINES BROTHERS,

MASON & HAMLIN'S CABINET ORGANS, FOR FAMILIES, CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS—Recognized by the musical profession as greatly superior to Harmoniums, Melodeons and all other small organs. (See our illustrated catalogue for explicit testimony to their superiority, from a majority of the most eminent organists of America.) Prices, $60 to $600 each.
CAUTION TO PURCHASERS.—The great reputation which our Cabinet Organs have obtained, and the extensive demand for them, have induced dealers to advertise, in some cases, quite different instruments as Cabinet Organs, and in others to represent to purchasers that Harmoniums and other reed organs are the same thing. This is not true. The excellence of our Cabinet Organs, which have given them their high reputation, are the result not merely of the superiority of their workmanship, but also, in large measure, of essential differences in construction, which, being patented, cannot be imitated by other makers. From these and their better quality and volume of tone and unrivaled capacity for expression, Warerooms in New-York, No. 7 Mercer-st.
MASON BROTHERS.

Full description of the latest Paris fashions in bonnets, dresses, cloaks, trimmings and children's apparel are also given, and the number must prove a valuable aid, not only to our country friends, but to many of our City ladies, whose domestic ties prevent them gratifying their shopping propensities. Forty thousand copies of this valuable aid to the fashionable ladies of New-York and vicinity were disposed of yesterday.—New-York Tribune.

CURDS'S CAVE—BY J. F. THOWBRIDGE.—This will be read with equal avidity with the author's former productions. While the story may be founded on facts, fancy has supplied what was wanting to impart to each successive character additional interest until the narrative glows with enchantment. ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, 15 cents, by first post, or $1 50 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, No. 308 Broadway, N. Y.

We have been requested to make public the following statement, emanating from the Commissioners of Harlem Bridge, which, it is to be regretted, has been in relation to the Harlem Bridge, about which so much has been said.

The bridge over Harlem River, at the narrows of the Third-avenue, was a toll-bridge, under a charter granted in 1858, but the Legislature, in 1861, passed an act declaring that from the termination of the charter, in April, 1862, it should become a free bridge, and constituted the Mayor and Street Commissioner of New-York, and the Judge of the County of Westchester, and the Chairman of its Board of Supervisors, a Board of Commissioners, with ample power, whenever they should deem it necessary, to make all necessary surveys and compensate to erect a new bridge in its place. This Board of Commissioners, finding the old bridge in a very dilapidated state, determined to erect a new one, and calling to their aid WM. J. MCALPINE, whom they appointed Chief Engineer, they requested him to prepare a plan, which they subsequently adopted and in October, 1860, they entered into contracts for its erection, not, however, for a specified sum, but at a specified price per pound for the iron, and per yard for the stone work, the contract reserving the right to the Commissioners to change or modify the plan, as they might see fit; in fact, leaving the whole matter of the plan an open question.

The manner in which these contracts were given out has been a good deal criticised. It is claimed that sufficient publicity was not given to invite competition, but that they were made on the bids of three parties, each bidding for a separate portion of the work, and their bids were accepted, on the recommendation of Mr. MCALPINE, that the prices were fair and reasonable. The Supervisors of New-York appointed a committee to investigate the subject, and their report is printed in their published proceedings.

In April, 1861, the Legislature amended the act of 1858, by appointing a new Board of Commissioners and conferring upon them all the powers of the former board.

When the new Commissioners assumed their duties they found the work in progress under the contracts made by their predecessors. Mr. MEAGH, one of the contractors, had delivered a portion of the iron cylinders for the piers of the pivot span, and several of them had been sunk to their place. He had also a large quantity of iron work at his shops, ready to be delivered. Mr. NIVEN, another contractor, had transported a large quantity of stone to the site. Much of it had been cut and ready for use, and workmen were engaged upon the remainder. Mr. VAN CLEVE, the other contractor, had ordered large quantities of plate iron from the mills of Ashbury & Rose, of Baltimore, of the form and dimensions required.

The first questions which met the new Commissioners, then, were as to the contracts. Have they been legally made, and are they binding upon the counties? If so, will the public interests be promoted by disregarding them and entering into new ones? Upon the first they sought the advice of legal counsel, and were advised that they were binding. Upon the second they were called to exercise their own judgment. Believing that they were appointed to build a bridge, and not to involve the counties in litigation, they determined that their course was to proceed with the erection from the point at which their predecessors had left it. The reasons which influenced them to this determination were, that if new contracts were made new material must be provided, and the material already prepared, being suitable for no other purpose, would be a total loss to the contractors in the event of damages being awarded them. Therefore, the counties would be necessitated to pay for this loss of the profits, in addition to paying the entire cost of the bridge to other contractors.

Their first act, after determining their course, was to reduce the salaries of the engineers and employes, and to dispense with the services of such as could be spared. The result of this was a saving of over $9,000 per annum in the working expenses. Mr. MCALPINE being identified with the plans adopted by the first board, it was deemed expedient to change the engineers, with a view of ascertaining whether a change of plans could not be advantageously adopted. Accordingly Mr. ALFRED W. SMITH was appointed Chief Engineer in his place. This gentleman, whose reputation as an engineer is well established in this community, accepted the appointment, on condition that he might name his assistants. This being conceded, he named Mr. THEODOR E. SICILIAN and Mr. ETHAN RODGERS, who were appointed. In these appointments the public will recognize a determination to avoid all political considerations. Neither of these gentlemen are known in politics; they are men of science, whose time has been solely devoted to their profession. Other names were pressed upon the Commissioners, and influence was brought to bear to secure their appointment, but it was disregarded, and this is, doubtless, one chief cause of the attacks which are so frequently made upon the Commissioners.

Having secured the services of the gentlemen above named, they were directed to examine the plans and report what alterations could be made in them that would secure to the work all the elements of strength, beauty and durability, with a due regard to an economical use of the material already prepared. The necessity of using this material prevented so extensive alterations as would otherwise have been made, but sufficient were effected to greatly improve it in beauty and strength, and in other respects. It would extend these remarks to too great a length to attempt to point out the improvements; it may be sufficient, therefore, to say, that in the estimation of some of the ablest engineers, the Harlem Bridge, according to the design now being carried out, will be one of the most beautiful structures of the kind in this country.

Perhaps few public works have ever encountered so many obstacles as this. Two contracts being regarded with suspicion, the authorities of the County of New-York at first refused to their consummation and aid. When the new commission was appointed they still held aloof, and were not induced to make the appropriation required by the Legislature until after long delay, during which, in answer to their resolutions of inquiry, they were supplied by the Commissioners with information upon every conceivable point in reference to the work. When satisfied, however, that the Commissioners were in good faith desired to acquit themselves of the trust committed to them, they have cooperated with them, and, in so far as they could do it, have aided in the removal of the obstacles with which they have had to contend.

Not so, however, with the authorities of the County of Westchester. Although the original law was drafted in its interest, by throwing nearly the whole cost of the bridge upon the County of New-York, while it shared in an equal, if not a greater degree in its advantages, they have never manifested a disposition to bear a small portion of the expense thus entailed to it. Securing to it an equal re ne emanation in the first Commission, they seek to shield it from the cost of its own representatives, by endeavoring to repudiate the contracts into which they entered under the authority of the law; and in doing this, they have raised obstacles and interposed difficulties in the way the new Commissioners, which have greatly retarded the work, and thus increased its cost, by postponing the time of its completion.

In support of this assertion let the facts in relation to the land required for the approach and abutmentsn the Westchester side be given. A small portion of land belonging to Mr. MOTT is required for these purposes. It is within the jurisdiction of Westchester County, and that county is expected to provide it. The erection of the abutment on the New-York side is prosecuted, and arrangements are made to proceed with the other; but the title to the land upon which it is to be built not being obtained, the commissioners are prohibited from entering upon it; while waiting for it they complete the south abutment, sink the iron columns for the north and south pier, and yet they are not put in possession of the land for the north abutment. Until that abutment is built, the arches spanning the space between it and the north pier cannot be erected; but, with that abutment, these arches may be erected simultaneously with the others, thereby greatly facilitating the work. Finally, a law is passed by the Legislature authorizing the Supreme Court of Westchester County, on the application of the Harlem Bridge Commissioners, to appoint three Commissioners to appraise the value of the land, and on the confirmation of their report to vest the title in that county. The Commissioners were appointed, but failed to meet, at the appointed time; another was appointed, but from one cause and another their action was delayed until June, 1863; two meetings were held, and they adjourned to September; two more meetings were held, and they adjourned to November. In January, 1864, they have not yet made their report, and on the 1st of February it was confirmed by the court; during all these delays the Bridge Commissioners were denied access to the Westchester shore, and were frequently taunted with the slow progress of the work which they were as powerless to prevent as the Israelites were to make brick without straw.

If the men who, as "a Special Committee appointed by the Board of Supervisors of Westchester County upon the subject of the new Harlem bridge" had manifested the same disposition to aid the Commissioners in the discharge of their duties as they do to find occasion to censure them, and had displayed as much diligence in endeavoring to remove obstacles as they have to gather material for their report, they might have conferred a benefit upon their constituents, the bridge might have been finished, and all the additional expense incident to the delay might have been avoided.

A little attention will not be given to some of the statements in this report, which are intended to reflect upon the conduct of the bridge Commissioners. The Committee say that with the testimony of the parties who came before them as witnesses, together with the testimony taken from the records, they are fully satisfied that the original contracts had their inception in corruption, and that the making thereof was designed to corruptly put money into the pockets of useless and unnecessary employers, and likewise into the pockets of incompetent and speculative contractors. This may be regarded as an inference which the Committee draws from the testimony, but unless it is shown that useless employers and incompetent contractors have put money into their pockets by means of these contracts, the inference falls to reach its point, and so far as the new Commissioners are concerned is utterly without force. As has already been remarked, all employers whose services were not required were dismissed, and the salaries of those retained were reduced to a fair, moderate compensation.

In the following paragraph the Committee seems desirous to fix upon the Commissioners a suspicion of unfairness towards one contractor and a partiality towards another, so as to give some force to their inference. They say, "Under the Van Cleve & Niven contract for the superstructure, according to the testimony, no work whatever was performed on the bridge by the 1st of October, 1861. A difficulty arose about work which NIVEN had done and for which he claimed payment; and a difficulty having arisen in the Van Cleve & Niven Contract, by the superstructure—they not being paid in advance—Mr. MEAGH, after the 1st September, 1863, obtained from NIVEN an assignment of his contract, which was consented to by the Commissioners, in November following; and, although NIVEN was unable to get what he claimed (some $20,000) from or through the Commissioners, yet it is a remarkable fact that Mr. MEAGH paid Mr. NIVEN the $20,000, at the consideration for his assignment, and he shortly thereafter obtained a re-payment of the same from the Commissioners out of the County Treasury of New-York."

A few words will explain all this: Mr. NIVEN has to build a coffer dam, in which to erect the south abutment; he builds one, but before pumping out the water he claims a payment of 80 per cent, on its cost, alleging also that he is entitled to payment on an approximate estimate upon the stone which he has prepared for the abutment. The Commissioners refuse to pay for the coffer dam until it has been tested and found to answer the purpose, for the obvious reason that if it should fail the loss would fall upon the Counties. After some time spent in vain endeavors to move them from their determination, the contractor pumps out the water, the coffer dam yields to the pressure from without, and gives way, subjecting him to a heavy loss, and rather than incur the risk of a second failure, he sells out all the stone and other material which he had prepared for the work to Mr. MEAGH, and transfers his contract to him. Mr. MEAGH then proceeds to construct a coffer dam after the plans furnished him by the Engineer, and in it he erects the abutment with the stone purchased from Mr. NIVEN, for which he is paid at the contract price, but not until the coffer dam had been tested, and the stone work built above low water mark. This surely cannot be regarded as putting money into the pockets of incompetent contractors. The contract for the iron work was made with the Trenton Locomotive and Machine Manufacturing Company, J. H. VAN GINEN, President. For their portion of the contract it appears that they had ordered large rolling mills of Ashbury & Rose, of Baltimore, a large quantity of plate iron, which was received at the Trenton works. Application was made to the Commissioners for a payment on account of their contract, which they refused on the ground that the price stipulated was the price at which the work was put in position, and that if a payment should be made upon an approximate estimate, it should only be made for material delivered into their possession, and that iron in the shops, although intended to be worked into the bridge, would not be regarded as in the possession of the Commissioners. Failing to induce the Commissioners to supply money for the purchase of iron, the Trenton Company transferred their contract to Mr. MEAGH. He also purchased the iron referred to, paid Messrs. ASHBURY & RUSE for it, and afterward used it in the construction of the work. Subsequent events have shown that the Commissioners acted with prudence in this matter, and if the Trenton Company thought themselves aggrieved, Mr. MEAGH met with no better treatment, as no payment was made to him until the iron was actually delivered at the site of the bridge, and it will be difficult to trace in this transaction any design to put money into the pockets of incompetent contractors.

It may be some consolation to the tax payers of the County of New-York, to learn that "the loose and careless manner in which large payments have been made out of the treasury of the County of New-York, under the action of the present Commissioners," has an existence only in the imagination of this Committee. The bill to which they doubtless refer being the first bill paid to MEAGH & EDWARDS, shows upon its face that it was for the iron cylinders and bolts furnished by them from the commencement of the work, and which had been sunk into the bed of the river, forming a portion of the columns for the centre pier. For this work certificates of indebtedness had been issued by the former Commissioners, upon certified returns of the Engineers. All of which were upon record, and furnished indubitable evidence of the correctness of the bill.

It seems to be remarkable, if any fraud has really been committed, that this indefatigable committee, having unrestricted access to the books and papers of the commission, as well as to those of the Comptroller's Office, aided by the services of a competent book-keeper, should have been so entirely unable to discover it as to compel them, for want of better evidence, to institute a comparison between Mr. MCALPINE's first estimates of the cost and the present ascertained cost, and to assume that the difference between them must necessarily have resulted from payments being made for iron which was never used in the work.

If they had desired to know the truth in relation to this matter, they could have learned from the plans in the possession of the Engineers, that Mr. MCALPINE, shortly after commencing the work, discovered that his first estimates would fall far short of its requirements, and that in consequence of this, he was obliged to make an increase in the quantity of masonry and iron work, and that all the work done while he was in charge, was in pursuance of these amended plans. The following statement, which has been carefully prepared by the Engineers, will show the extent of this increase. The quantity of masonry in the abutments and piers estimated for by Mr. MCALPINE in October, 1860, was 2,768 cubic yards. The quantity required by him, in May, 1861, was 4,440 cubic yards, being an increase of over 60 per cent. At the time the contract for the iron columns was made, Mr. MCALPINE specified that the central pier would contain ten columns, to be sunk from 30 feet below the bed of the river, and to be 1¼ inches thickness of shell. Mr. MCALPINE subsequently changed the plans and ordered twelve columns for this pier, increasing the thickness of shell from 1¼ to 2 inches, and the first column sunk by him was driven to a depth of 37 feet below the bed of the river. The increase in the quantity of iron in this pier was therefore over 100 per cent.

These figures show conclusively that the committee had no ground for inferring that, "although Wm. J. MCALPINE, before the contracts were given out, certified that the entire quantity which would be used at the rates per pound specified in the contract would not exceed $176,000," yet that iron has been paid for (but really not used) upon this work to the amount of about $300,000;" and that, therefore, "to conclude that iron has been properly paid for, and that correct weights have been certified to, is, to say the least, to convict Mr. MCALPINE of gross ignorance in his profession, and to indorse the extreme credulity of our people."

This increase, occasioned by the amended plans of Mr. MCALPINE, was evidently the result of more extended examination and a fuller appreciation of the difficulties to be encountered in preparing the foundation of the bridge. When he left the plans of the Commissioners, the central pier were sunk, and the total cost of the work up to that time was about $25,000. Estimating the remaining five columns at the same rate per column, the cost of this pier alone would be $125,000, or considerably more than one-half of the entire estimated cost of the whole bridge at the time of its commencement. It might also be stated that, by substituting iron for stone piers, the additional quantity of 3,200,000 pounds of iron was used, which the committee ought to have been willing to admit increases considerably the quantity consumed.

If the simple statement of facts serve to destroy its basis, the whole charge falls to the ground.

There are a few other points in the report which might be made the subject of comment, but they refer mostly to those questions in which the committee differ with the commissioners as to their duties. Upon one of these points, which MR. KNOX possesses the perfection. There will be found at his establishment a variety of coverings for the heads of gentlemen and youths, which are well worthy of attention.

SCRANTON COAL AT AUCTION.

OFFICE OF THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN RAILROAD CO., NEW-YORK, March 16, 1864.

This Company will hold their Fourteenth Regular Monthly Auction, on WEDNESDAY, the 30th day of March, 1864, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the office of the Company, No. 23 William-st., at which time they will offer, by ORMEN DRAPER, Auctioneer,
TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND TONS OF FRESH MINED SCRANTON COAL, embracing all the usual sizes, and deliverable at their depot, Elizabethport, N. J., during the month of April next.

The sale will be positive. Each lot put up will be sold to the highest bidder, in hands, in any form, whatever being made for account of, or on behalf of the Company.

Fifty cents per ton in bankable funds, to be paid at the time and place of sale, and the balance in like funds on receiving the order for the coal, which must be called for within ten days thereafter, and the coal taken away within thirty days from the day of sale, unless navigation is obstructed. Buyers who wish, however, can have an additional thirty days for taking the delivery of their purchases, by making a further deposit of fifty cents per ton within the ten days above specified. Interest at 7 per cent. per annum will be charged on the balance, from the time stipulated for payment until paid, and twenty-five cents per ton to cover the expense of stocking the coal—both to be paid on delivery of order.

The other conditions of sale will be substantially those hitherto accepted by all purchasers, by private contract, of coal delivered at Elizabethport, so far as applicable. The coal will be delivered direct from the cars on their arrival from the mines, when practicable—otherwise from the stock. NOTICE TO THE FIRST AND SECOND MORTGAGE BONDHOLDERS OF THE PITTSBURGH, FORT WAYNE AND CHICAGO RAILWAY COMPANY.—The Board of Directors of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway Company have requested the undersigned to call meetings of the First Mortgage and Second Mortgage Bondholders, in pursuance of the provisions of the deeds of trust, for the purpose of considering certain modifications of the present financial system of the company, to which the assent of a majority in interest of each of those classes of bondholders by a vote at a meeting is necessary. The principle of the proposed measures was published to the annual meeting of the corporation held at Pittsburgh on the 10th inst., at which were represented a majority of the stockholders and of each class of the bondholders, and was unanimously approved.
The undersigned, therefore, in exercise of the authority conferred upon them by Article 12 of the First and Second Deeds of Trust, give notice that will be held at the banking house of Winslow, Lanier & Co., No. 59 Wall-st., in the City of New-York, on THURSDAY, the 7th day of April, 1864, at 11 A. M., for the purpose of considering the aforesaid measures.
MEETINGS OF THE FIRST AND SECOND MORTGAGE BONDHOLDERS
At such meetings the bondholders, if registered, may vote in person or by proxy.
Registration on the Voting Register can be made by any holder at the office or agency of the company, at the banking house of Winslow, Lanier & Co., where the books are now open for that purpose, on presentation by the holder of his bonds, or on his filing the written order of the person last registered as the holder.
The registration was originally in the names of the persons to whom the bonds were issued. In cases in which the bonds have since changed hands, the present holder can vote only by registering himself, or upon the proxy of the person last registered.
A general attendance of the bondholders is earnestly requested, as well to act on the questions aforesaid, as to perfect the organization contemplated in Article 12 of the Deeds of Trust.
The meetings of the First and Second Mortgage Bondholders will be held separately, but at the same time and place, and the holders of the Third Mortgage Bonds are invited to be present, though their action is not required by the Trust Deeds.
The resolutions adopted at the annual meeting, and the resolution of the Board of Directors requesting a call of meetings of the bondholders, are subjoined.
JOHN FERGUSON, } Trustees for the First and SAMUEL J. TILDEN, } Second M'ges Bondholders.

RESOLUTIONS
Recommended by the Board of Directors to the Stockholders for adoption at the Annual Meeting, March 9, 1864.
Resolved, That it is expedient that expenditures for construction, equipment and objects pertinent thereto, involving new capital, should in the main be provided for by an increase of capital stock of the company.
Resolved, That the increase of capital stock should be made solely for the purpose of building and completing a double track, or such part thereof as may be expedient, and for equipping the road and providing such additional rolling stock, machinery, appurtenances and other facilities as may be necessary to properly do all the business which may offer, and for no other purpose, and should only be issued from year to year in such amounts as the stockholders at their annual meetings may decide upon. Their decision shall be based upon detailed estimates, made by the Board of Directors, of the amount of money necessary for the work of the year, and that the new issue of stock shall only be sold after public notice.
Resolved, That the increase of capital for 1864 shall not exceed $1,500,000.
Resolved, That the stockholders hereby recommend, and, as far as may be necessary, authorize the Board of Directors to make such agreement or arrangement with the holders of the bonds under the trust deeds as will enable them to increase the capital stock, as indicated in the preceding resolutions.
